Scheer compares Trudeau debt to parents leaving 'unpaid credit card bill' to children

In a speech at an Ontario Progressive Conservative Party Convention Saturday morning, Conservative Party of Canada leader Andrew Scheer criticized the spending practices of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the Liberal Party.

"He has increased Canada's debt faster than any peacetime prime minister in Canadian history," Scheer asserted.

Spending by the Canadian government has notably increased since Trudeau took office.

previously assembled a database to track government spending, which revealed that the Liberals have made nearly 9,000 spending announcements since Trudeau took office two years ago, far surpassing the 7,300 spending announcements made during the four years of the Harper majority government.

"No one would leave an unpaid credit card bill to their children, but that's exactly what Trudeau is doing," Scheer continued during his speech.

Scheer's comments seem to stem from a report published by the Fraser Institute in 2017, stating that Trudeau is on track to be the largest accumulator of debt among prime ministers who took office in times of economic stability and minimal global conflict.

Some experts have noted, however, that many estimates regarding Canada's federal debt do not take into account the government's current assets.

reported in March that while our federal market debt hit $1 trillion this year, this number is offset by almost $380 billion in assets, bringing the total of the country's net debt to a more manageable $651 billion.

According to documents prepared by RBC based on government projections, Canada's net debt is expected to rise to $730 billion by 2023. Between 2016, the first full year Trudeau held office, and 2023, the year RBC's projections end, the federal net debt will have increased by a potential $1 billion over that seven-year period.

In addition to discussing the spending practices of the Trudeau government, Scheer pledged to do away with Trudeau's carbon tax, pledged to continue challenging the prime minister during Question Period in the House of Commons, and encouraged Ontario Conservatives to make Trudeau a "one-term prime minister."

The next federal election will take place in October 2019.

Conservative leader Stephen Harper was prime minister for six of those seven years, having taken office in 2006 and held office for three terms.

To receive the alert, phone owners have to have a smartphone capable of connecting to an LTE network. The phone must also be connected to an LTE network at the time the alert is active.

Phones also must have the carrier's latest software installed.

If phones meet all of these requirements but still fail to receive the alerts, they can contact their service provider.

Canadians cannot opt-out of the alerts themselves.

Canadians will soon get an emergency alert text message- it's a test

Some Canadians will be getting an emergency alert from the government on Nov. 28 - but it's just a test.

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale explained in a press release Monday that the alert will be sent through the Alert Ready program, Canada's national public alerting system.

On Nov. 28, each province and territory will issue an alert over radio, TV and wireless networks at 1:55 p.m. local time. In Quebec, it will be an hour later at 2:55 p.m. local time.

Will you get an alert?

Not all Canadians will be receiving a text message alert though. That depends on a variety of factors, including a phone's software and wireless carrier.

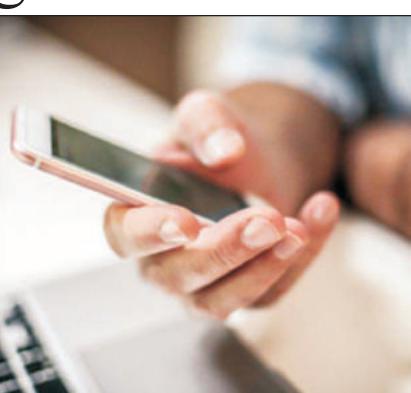

The Alert Ready website explains that the majority of wireless carriers in Canada are compatible with the alerts.

To receive the alert, phone owners have to have a smartphone capable of connecting to an LTE network. The phone must also be connected to an LTE network at the time the alert is active.

Phones also must have the carrier's latest software installed.

Canadians cannot opt-out of the alerts themselves.

Sorting out previous glitches
The text message system is being tested for the second time - it was first tested in May, but there were several technical difficulties.

Several people across the country reported that their phones met all the requirements, but they still did not receive a text.

"Regular testing helps ensure that we are prepared to deliver urgent and lifesaving warnings to the public in times of an emergency or disaster," the press release explained.

More than 100 real wireless alerts have also been sent since April. For example, an emergency alert was sent to the Ottawa-Gatineau region on Sept. 21 as it dealt with tornadoes.

"Although Canada's public alerting system could not save people's homes or properties, it provided people with precious time to seek shelter from the catastrophic winds and flying debris," the press release explained.

Alarming alerts have also been sent to the public about severe weather events such as flooding, ice storms and blizzards.

Canadian dead more than a week after plane crash in Guyana: Global Affairs spokesman Kayla Reece said in an email.

A news release on the airline's website said it was co-operating fully with authorities investigating the crash.

"Our immediate focus is on the safe repatriation and welfare of all of our passengers," said the release.

A Toronto resident who was on board has said the plane drove over spikes that burst its tires before crashing through a chain-link fence and coming to rest at the edge of a small cliff.

Global Affairs said it couldn't provide further details on the identity of the Canadian citizen, citing privacy concerns.

However, the airline identified the victim as Rookia Kalloo, and said its "thoughts and sympathies" are with her family.

"Whilst Mrs Kalloo is not recorded as having been treated in hospital for any injuries as a result of the accident, we are investigating the position further and lending all possible assistance and support to Mrs. Kalloo's relatives as they come to terms with their loss,"

Refugee claims to Canada on track to hit highest levels in nearly 30 years

Canada is on track to receive its highest number of refugee claims since record-keeping began nearly three decades ago, the latest data shows.

That news comes as government's handling of immigration falls under scrutiny ahead of next year's federal election.

Despite cooler weather, the number of refugee claimants jumped past 6,000 in October, the highest monthly tally this year, the data released on Thursday showed.

That takes total claims in the first 10 months of 2018 to 46,245, putting the country on track to surpass last year's record even as the quasi-judicial body that adjudicates claims struggles to work through a 64,000-person backlog.

The Immigration and Refugee Board started tracking refugee claimant data in 1989.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's government faces a widely held belief that Canada has been overwhelmed by immigrants pressing asylum claims, even though it receives far fewer than many other countries.

The government has struggled to lawyer Lorne Waldman.

"I think we're going to see 50,000-plus (refugee claims annually) for the foreseeable future."

A spokesman for Immigration and Refugees Minister Ahmed Hussen noted that this year's budget included an additional $74 million for the Immigration and Refugee Board "to speed up the processing of asylum claims."

The hiring of 248 new staff "is under way," spokesman Mathieu Genest wrote in an email.

About 56 per cent of refugee claims finalized in the first three quarters of 2018 were accepted, according to the Immigration and Refugee Board, with lower acceptance rates for border-crossers.

Border-crossers from Nigeria and Haiti, who made up the largest groups of border-crossers, had relatively low acceptance rates compared with other nationalities, at 29.3 per cent and 11.6 percent, respectively.

Canada's government is trying to hasten the deportations of border-crossers whose refugee claims are not successful, classifying them with criminals as a top deportation priority.

The government should also prioritize integration of successful applicants, said Canadian Council for Refugees head Janet Dench, and ensure that tens of thousands of people are not left waiting years for permanent resident status.

"The longer you keep people in this limbo state, the longer before they can contribute fully to Canadian society."

balance Canada's reputation as a haven for those fleeing persecution with warnings that filing refugee claims is no "free ticket" to remain in the country.

The governing Liberals have come under fire for their handling of the more than 37,000 people who have walked across the Canada-U.S. border seeking asylum since January 2017.

Many of those people told Reuters they did not feel safe in President Donald Trump's United States.

About 1,400 crossed the frontier in October, down from 1,600 the month before.

But most refugee claimants enter the country by other means, and their numbers are growing.

"There are 65 million refugees in the world, and there are many desperate people trying to find safety and refuge in western countries," said Toronto-based Tony Micallef, executive director of the Canadian Council for Refugees.

Patrick Brown calls Lisa MacLeod 'nasty,' 'angry,' says members of PC Caucus 'hated her' in new book

The former leader of the Ontario Progressive Conservatives is not pulling punches when it comes to social services minister Lisa MacLeod.

Brampton's newly elected mayor Patrick Brown is scheduled to release 'Take Down: The Attempted Political Assassination of Patrick Brown' later this week.

In an advance copy shared with Global News, Brown unleashes on MacLeod saying, "When I think about Lisa MacLeod, I think about a person who is always angry. She was just angry with everything, with everyone and with her situation in life."

Brown also claims, "Members of caucus hated her. If anyone else in caucus went off script the way MacLeod did, they'd be kicked out."

Brown resigned from the party early this year after allegations of sexual misconduct were leveled against him. The allegations have not been proven in court.

Brown questioned in the book if MacLeod was one of the architects behind his exit from Queen's Park.

"Might it be that she was involved?" he wrote. "I had heard that MacLeod had been conspiring against me for some time."

Brown also questioned MacLeod's loyalty, especially in the hours and days following his resignation.

Brown alleges he heard rumors MacLeod "cut a deal" with Vic Fedeli.

"MacLeod and Fedeli appeared to be the first to immediately benefit from my takedown, he by becoming interim party leader and she by being named the finance critic, the top job after being leader," Brown wrote.

In his book, Brown references a late night conference call with members of PC caucus that took place on the evening of his departure from Queen's Park.

Brown dubs the evening, "The Night of Knives."

He references MacLeod's remarks on that conference call, saying, "We're going into a campaign and we've just lost it now. I think Patrick, with all due respect, you don't have the confidence of your campaign team. You don't have the confidence of our caucus. You actually have to give those on this call and those candidates you recruited a fighting chance on June 7."

In response Brown writes, "Which Lisa was this talking about doing right for the team? Would it be the Lisa, of the 'I can't keep staff cause I'm so nasty' Lisa? Or perhaps the 'I can't work well with anybody' Lisa? I couldn't believe my ears."

Brown also writes of MacLeod's struggles with mental health.

He said Eastern Ontario party organizers and members of MacLeod's team believed "that MacLeod made up the mental health issues she claimed to have suffered during the nomination races in order to endear the public to her and to make it difficult for her to be defeated in the nomination."

Brown claims he told organizers to give MacLeod the benefit of the doubt but added, "None of what I did for MacLeod ever registered."

When asked about the release of Brown's book this week by Global News, MacLeod originally said, "I don't comment on fiction."

But after the publication of the story on Wednesday, MacLeod issued another statement.

"I am proud to be a member of the PC

Government with our Premier Doug

Ford. Our caucus is united, strong,

and focused on bringing relief to the people

Ontario rejects federal government's changes to passive investment income taxes

OTTAWA - The Ontario government is refusing to follow the federal Liberals' lead with a controversial tax change related to passive investment income in personal corporations.

Federal Finance Minister Bill Morneau's office has maintained the change was about ensuring wealthy people didn't start tiny corporations just to get a better tax rate than people in the middle class.

The federal tax change was part of Morneau's package of reforms last year, which he eventually watered down following a backlash from small-business owners and incorporated professionals, such as doctors and lawyers.

In its fall economic update today, the province's Progressive Conservative government says it will introduce new legislation to reverse a plan by its Liberal predecessors to parallel the federal changes in Ontario.

Ontario Premier Doug Ford's fall update says implementing the measure in the province would increase taxes on small businesses by about $160 million per year by 2020-21.

Other provinces have also been skeptical about Ottawa's plan. Last summer, finance ministers from Manitoba and Saskatchewan said they intended to press Morneau to find out how complicated it would be if their provinces ultimately decided against implementing Ottawa's plan.

Pooja Bedi's daughter Aalia Furniturewalla to feature in Saif Ali Khan starrer Jawani Janeman

Just two days ago, we got a glimpse into the role that will be essayed by Saif Ali Khan in the film Jawani Janeman. Directed by Nitin Kakkar, there has been a new addition in the star cast. That of the young debutant Aalia Furniturewalla who is the daughter of Jo Jeeta Wahi Sikander star Pooja Bedi. She will be stepping into Bollywood with this rom-com.

In earlier reports, we had mentioned that Jawani Janeman will focus primarily on a father - daughter relationship. We had also stated that Saif Ali Khan is expected to play the role of an accidental father who suddenly realizes that he is a father to a teenage daughter. The latter's role will be essayed by Aalia Furniturewalla.

A source close to the project confirmed the developments saying, "Yes, Aalia Furniturewalla has been roped in for the Nitin Kakkar film. She has really liked the script of Jawani Janeman. And she is super excited to work with Saif Ali Khan who plays the role of her father." It will be interesting to see Saif and Aalia since they are sharing screen space for the first time.

In the previous reports, we had also stated that Saif essays the character of a 40 year old man who refuses to grow up. The film has been of keen interest to the Hum Tum actor who has been looking forward to doing a fun, frothy film which are the key elements of this Nitin Kakkar directorial. On the other hand, details of the character to be played by Aalia are currently being kept under wraps. Also it is yet to be seen if the makers will rope in other actors to play the love interests of Saif and his debutant onscreen.

Jawani Janeman is expected to go on floor in London and the shooting will kick start from next year onwards. An official announcement on these details is expected to be made soon.

Christian Bale to meet Kareena Kapoor Khan, Madhuri Dixit, Anil Kapoor and others during his Mumbai trip for Mowgli premiere city of dreams. And his well-planned itinerary also includes meeting stars like Kareena Kapoor Khan, Anil Kapoor, Madhuri Dixit amongst others.

Recent reports have it that Christian Bale is planning to fly down to Mumbai for a 48 hour trip which mainly focuses on attending the premiere of Mowgli - Legend Of The Jungle. Bale essays the character of the much loved Bagheera - the black panther. Readers, who have come across the trailer, would be aware that this film explores a different aspect of Mowgli's life and portrays a different perception of the story compared to Jon Favreau's 2016 film The Jungle Book.

Coming to the premiere, we hear that besides attending it, Christian Bale will also be interacting with actors who have dubbed their voices for the varied characters for the Hindi version of Mowgli. Besides Kareena Kapoor Khan, Anil Kapoor and Madhuri Dixit, the Bollywood stars who have lent their voice for the film include Abhishek Bachchan, Jackie Shroff amongst others. If reports are to be believed, Christian Bale will be staying in a plush five star in Juhu in suburban Mumbai. It is yet to be seen if the Bollywood entourage will plan a bash for the Hollywood star.

Besides Christian Bale, Freida Pinto who plays a villager, Rohan Chand who plays the protagonist Mowgli and Andy Serkis who is not only the director of the film but also plays Baloo in it, too will be flying down to India for the world premiere.

Ever since Thugs Of Hindostan was announced, fans were waiting to watch this mega blockbuster on screen. Unfortunately, this epic saga which featured some of the biggest names in the world of Indian cinema failed to live up to the expectations of people. The film has just managed to collect a little over Rs. 143 crore, which is way below the predictions given by trade pundits before the film's release.

A report in a leading portal claims that the disappointing box-office figures have resulted in the producers and exhibitors of the film suffering heavy losses. The web portal claims that it is only the sub-distributors of Yash Raj Films, who distributed the film on a commission basis, are at profit.

Since the production house distributed the film on a minimum guarantee deal, they have pocketed a heavy chunk of the profit. The report also reveals that the losses faced by the exhibitors are even higher than Salman Khan's Tubelight. In fact, even the producers of Shah Rukh Khan's Harry Met Sejal made profits, however, it isn't the same case with this one. Their last and only hope is now China where the film will be released next month. The film stars Aamir Khan, Amitabh Bachchan, Katrina Kaif and Fatima Sana Sheikh in leading roles and is directed by Vijay Krishna Acharya.
