آج کل میڈیا میں سامحساہیوال موضوع بحث ہے۔ موصوفت اور ذہنی اس کی خدمت میں کوئی سر نہیں چھوڑ رہی۔ لیکن پچھلے دنوں سامحساہیوال کی ہمدردی کی سانس لینا مشکل ہے۔ سامحساہیوال کی زبان پر ایک ہی دردناک اور ہلکا سا لہجہ ہے۔

لیکن محال ہے کہ صرف وہی ہی ہو جو کہ سامحساہیوال کی زبان سے نکلنے والی ہے۔ سامحساہیوال کے سامنے جو کہ سامحساہیوال کی زبان سے نکلنے والی ہے۔ سامحساہیوال کی زبان سے نکلنے والی ہے۔ سامحساہیوال کی زبان سے نکلنے والی ہے۔

Hearing will be held in Milton court on Feb. 14

The Oakville municipal election may be over, however, a challenge concerning the validity of the Ward 7 elections appears to be just getting started.

The races in Ward 7 were particularly close.

The election race for Ward 7 town and regional councillor ended with BDO Canada LLP consultant Pavan Parmar coming out on top with 570 votes, followed by local entrepreneur Shahrez Daniyal Hayder with 502 votes, health care executive Nav Nanda with 491 votes, software consultant Amir Henry with 371 votes and financial professional Shahab Khan with 108 votes.

The Ward 7 town councillor race was closer still with lawyer Jasvinder Sandhu elected with 551 votes, Realtor Saima Zaidi getting 532 votes, Adrian Paris receiving 455 votes and Ajay Roshia receiving 420 votes.

With Sandhu and Parmar's swearing-in to Oakville council still a recent memory, Hayder's family has hired a lawyer and filed an application with the Ontario Superior Court of Justice, which among other things calls on the court to issue an order determining that the Ward 7 elections were not valid and that a by-election should be held.

A hearing will be held in Milton court on Feb. 14 to address the matter.

The application says the grounds for requesting the Ward 7 elections be invalidated include alleged errors made in which Ward 6 voting cards were sent to Ward 7 voters.

Allegations are also made in the application that people voted in the Ward 7 election who did not actually live in the ward.

The application lists a few names and addresses of these alleged individuals.

It also argues that in the event just 19 votes or more were impacted by the issues or alleged issues described, the Ward 7 town councillor election should be ruled invalid as the outcome of the election would have been impacted.

None of the allegations have been proven in court.

For the Ward 7 town and regional councillor race that threshold is set at 68 or more impacted votes.

"This isn't about me not winning. This is about the culture of Oakville and how democracy should be," said Hayder.

Hayder is asking the Superior Court of Justice for a court order that will compel the Town of Oakville to disclose the voters' list and various other documents and communications concerning the Ward 7 election.

The application states this information is key to determining whether any voting irregularities took place and if so, how widespread they were.

Oakville Mayor Rob Burton has declined to comment on the matter, stating it is before the courts.

The town's director of strategy, policy and communications, Jane Courtemanche, said the town will be responding to the application at the court hearing on Feb. 14.

Parmar declined to comment because the matter is before the courts.

Sandhu said her campaign was run in full compliance with all laws.

The Town of Oakville has previously asserted that the integrity of the Ward 7 municipal election race was maintained despite nearly 200 Ward 7 households receiving Ward 6 voter cards.

Town clerk Vicki Tytaneck confirmed to the Oakville Beaver in November 2018 that as the main batch of voter notification cards were being printed and mailed on Sept. 21, 2018, an error was discovered in the Municipal Property Assessment Corporation (MPAC) voters' list that identified 179 households in Ward 7 as being in Ward 6.

Tytaneck noted hand delivery of the revised voter cards started the day after the discovery of the error (Sept. 22) with 96 cards delivered in this way.

She said 12 cards were not delivered or replaced because it was discovered those voters were no longer at that address or were not eligible voters.

The remaining cards were placed in the mail Oct. 1 to allow mail time delivery prior to advance voting, which started Oct. 6.

The application argues that despite these efforts some Ward 7 residents were still directed to vote in Ward 6.

It lists the names of two people who allegedly experienced this issue.

The application says inquiries were made of the town to determine the scope of this issue,

Past candidate calling on Ontario Superior Court of Justice to invalidate Ward 7 elections

On Oct. 25, 2018 officials said the town followed prescribed processes to establish eligible voters at all voting locations.

They said all voters were required to provide appropriate identification as set out in the Municipal Elections Act and affirm an oral oath of qualification before being added to the voters' list and/or being issued a ballot.

Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing spokesperson Conrad Spozowka said the Ontario Superior Court of Justice can order that a by-election be held if it determines the election is not valid.

He said the court also has the authority to determine if someone else was validly elected or is entitled to the office.

In the event the court does order a by-election the application is also calling for an order pursuant to subsection 83(5) of the Municipal Elections Act requiring the town to compensate each candidate in the Ward 7 election who seeks to enter the by-election in the amount of election expenses incurred by those candidates in the original election.

The application calls for the costs involved in this application to be paid by the Town of Oakville or by a candidate who was successful in the Oct. 22 election.

Complaints about the Ward 7 election have also been made to the OPP.

On Jan. 21 they said they were still in the process of determining whether an investigation is warranted.

but access to relevant documentation was refused.

The town has also previously responded to allegations that people voted in Ward 7 who do not live there.

Chinese investment in Canada cut by nearly half as diplomatic spats, currency controls take toll

'It suggests the heady days of Chinese investment are certainly over for now'

Chinese investment in Canada nearly halved in 2018, as Beijing's restrictions on capital outflows combined with rising Western scrutiny of its state-owned firms and heightened diplomatic tensions to put a damper on its global dealmaking ambitions.

At 47 per cent, the drop in investment in Canadian firms was slightly deeper than the global decline, which came in at 40 per cent, according to new data from the Canada-China Investment Tracker, maintained by the University of Alberta's China Institute. Total investment fell to $4.43 billion from $8.45 billion in 2017.

"What struck us was the sharpness of the decline, which was quite significant albeit somewhat in line with global figures," said Gordon Houlden, a former Canadian diplomat and head of the institute. "It suggests the heady days of Chinese investment are certainly over for now."

The slump - evident in nearly all the sectors that traditionally attract interest from Chinese firms - is partially the result of capital controls imposed by Beijing in 2016 and 2017. China is attempting to stabilize its currency - down 10 per cent at its weakest point last year - by preventing money from fleeing the country via overseas investments.

But a host of other factors are also likely at play, Houlden said, including Chinese investor caution due to poorly performing Canadian energy investments and an overall chill cast by a year of fraught relations between Ottawa and Beijing.

In May, Ottawa blocked the $1.51 billion takeover of the construction firm Aecon Group Inc. by a Chinese state-owned enterprise, citing national security concerns. The federal government is in the midst of another comprehensive national-security review on the involvement of Chinese telecom giant Huawei in Canada's eventual 5G mobile network.

And Ottawa is locked in an escalating diplomatic row with Beijing over the detention of Huawei senior executive Meng Wanzhou, arrested in Vancouver on a U.S. extradition request - a move that was followed by the detentions of Canadian citizens in China.

Though the Meng case is too recent to have had an impact on the investment data, the rising scrutiny of Chinese firms in Canada is likely to have already taken a toll on investment flows, Houlden said.

"In general I think there was a chilling effect due to investment turndowns that predate the Meng case," he said. "Mergers and acquisitions are expensive, they are time consuming, there's a lot of uncertainty, particularly in the case of China where security concerns are more likely to come into play. Do you really want to go through a year of litigation and then get turned down? Those things have a cumulative effect."

Chinese investment in the information technology sector fell 94 per cent to $26 million in 2018 compared to a year earlier, according to the data. Health and biotechnology investment dropped to $5 million, a 95 per cent decline, while energy investment fell 84 per cent to $140 million.

Chinese firms have endured steep losses on Canadian oil and gas deals made during the energy boom. Indeed, the state-run CNOOC Ltd. paid $15.1 billion for Calgary oil producer Nexen Inc. in 2012 only to book significant losses due to low prices and operational problems. And other Chinese firms made bets on Canadian energy firms assuming that more pipeline capacity would be built in order to move their product to market.

The plunge in energy sector investment "is not just a China story," but one that has affected a broad range of foreign investment, noted Doug Porter, chief economist at BMO Capital Markets.

"But the Nexen experience was less than ideal," he said.

And while the current tensions over the Meng case may only play out for a month or two, when it comes to attracting Chinese investment, Porter added that "obviously the background is very challenging at this point."

While down overall, Chinese investment in Canada's metals and minerals sector spiked to $3.7 billion in 2018 from $264 million a year earlier - the highest level on record. The top deal in that sector saw China's Zijin Mining Group Co. Ltd. pay $1.86 billion for B.C.'s Nevsun Resources Ltd.

Chinese interests in industrial and electronics equipment rose 11 per cent to $486 million. Investment in all other sectors declined.

Despite various points of friction over the past year, Canada has been attempting to build stronger links with China, as it endeavours to diversify trade flows away from the United States.

But any future trade and investment links with Beijing may ultimately depend on the outcome of ongoing trade talks between the world's two economic superpowers.

"We are a storehouse of resources, we have an Arctic presence, there's a whole range of reasons why in the long term China is going to want to deal with us," Houlden said. "But our very prosperity relies on trade. One way or the other we are in a global boat and tightly tied to our U.S. partners, so that relationship impacts on us."

Canadian dollar weakens from two-week high on falling oil

The Canadian dollar weakened against its U.S. counterpart on Monday, pulling back from its highest in more than two weeks as oil prices fell and investors grew more worried about China's economy.

World stocks were pressured by a second straight monthly fall in profits for China's industrial firms.

Officials from China are due to visit Washington this week for the next round of trade negotiations with the United States. The trade dispute between the world's two largest economies could worsen the outlook for global growth.

Canada is running a current account deficit and exports many commodities, including oil, so its economy could be hurt by a slowdown in the global flow of trade or capital.

The price of oil fell after U.S. companies added rigs for the first time this year, a signal that crude output may rise further. U.S. crude oil futures were down nearly 2 per cent at $52.63 a barrel.

Still, oil has rebounded about 24 per cent since hitting an 18-month low in December.

At 8:58 a.m. (1358 GMT), the Canadian dollar was trading 0.3 per cent lower at 1.3257 to the greenback, or 75.43 U.S. cents. The currency's weakest level of the session was 1.3264, while it touched its strongest since Jan. 11 at 1.3204.

The 17-day high for the loonie came despite weak domestic data last week that prompted some economists to project that Canada's economy contracted in November. November gross domestic product data is due on Thursday.

Canadian government bond prices were mixed across the yield curve, with the two-year up 0.5 Canadian cent to yield 1.882 per cent and the 10-year falling 1 Canadian cent to yield 1.979 per cent.

The gap between Canada's 2-year yield and its U.S. equivalent widened by 1.4 basis points to a spread of 72.9 basis points in favour of the U.S. bond, its widest since Dec. 20.

Canadian sentenced to death in China launches appeal, writes own request for review

Canadian Robert Schellenberg has applied to appeal a death sentence issued by a Chinese court, writing his own letter to ask a higher court to examine his case.

The request sets in motion new legal scrutiny for a sentence the Canadian government has protested, although experts warn that the political oversight of Chinese courts means that appeals often produce little change in outcomes.

In addition, a senior Chinese official recently told a visiting European delegation that even executing Mr. Schellenberg "50 times" would not be out of line with the severity of his crime, further underscoring the odds against him.

On Jan. 14, the Dalian Intermediate People's Court said Mr. Schellenberg, 36, should be executed for his role as a "core member" in a conspiracy to smuggle 222 kilograms of methamphetamine from China to Australia. The court delivered the verdict less than 70 minutes after the conclusion of a single-day trial, a process that Chinese lawyers called unusual for its speed.

Mr. Schellenberg was arrested in 2014 and sentenced to 15 years in prison in November, 2018. However, Chinese authorities quickly ordered a retrial on more serious drug-related charges in late December, following the arrest in Canada of Huawei executive Meng Wanzhou.

On Monday, Mr. Schellenberg issued a request for an appeal in a document he wrote himself, an unusual feature of the Chinese justice system, where an application for what's called a "second-instance" trial is largely a formality.

"I told him that an appeal was his right," and that he could marshal arguments for the court in his submission, said Zhang Dongshuo, Mr. Schellenberg's lawyer. A court translator will render the Canadian man's words into Chinese. Mr. Schellenberg, who has previously been jailed in Canada on drug charges, has said he is innocent of the accusations against him in China, where he was found guilty of organized international drug trafficking.

"I gave him guidance on the rough direction he could take in the document," Mr. Zhang said. "I think it's a good way to protect his right to voice an opinion and defend himself."

It's not clear how quickly things will proceed from here. According to a primer on Chinese law published by the Canadian government, an appeal "should take up to two to four months."

The Chinese Supreme People's Court must also give a final review and approval before a person can be executed.

Mr. Schellenberg's family said in a statement delivered by spokeswoman Anna Marie White that it hopes and expects "due process would be followed and that Bob would have access to every mechanism of justice possible. Thinking of how our justice system works, it would be incredibly scary to think of anyone having to write their own appeal but we recognize the Chinese system differs and hope that he is getting the support and guidance he needs."

Chinese foreign ministry spokesman Geng Shuang on Monday said "China's conduct is based on the rule of law."

The Canadian government has requested clemency for Mr. Schellenberg, calling the death penalty "inhumane and inappropriate," and Canadian diplomats in Beijing have reached out to representatives of other countries, asking them to quietly lobby China on Mr. Schellenberg's case as a matter of urgency.

China has, however, rebuffed international entreaties on the matter. On Jan. 18, Helga Maria Schmid, secretary-general of the European External Action Service - the foreign service of the European Union - came to Beijing for meetings, including with executive vice-minister of foreign affairs Le Yucheng.

When Ms. Schmid began to discuss Mr. Schellenberg, however, she was told by a senior Chinese official: "Even if China executed Schellenberg 50 times, that would still be in keeping with the seriousness of his offence."

The Globe and Mail confirmed the elements in this account with three diplomats in Beijing. Adam Kaznowski, an EU spokesperson, said Ms. Schmid had raised human rights issues in China, but he declined to discuss specific details.

Experts said Mr. Schellenberg's best hope of avoiding execution - perhaps through a suspended death sentence - lies not in mounting a convincing legal defence against the allegations, but in convincing Chinese authorities to lighten his sentence.

"The degree of independence in the appeals process in China is quite limited, as is the degree of independence in the whole judicial system," said Joshua Rosenzweig, East Asia research director at Amnesty International.

McCullum, over comments he made to the media regarding the extradition of detained Huawei executive Meng Wanzhou to the United States.

Trudeau asked for and accepted McCullum's resignation Friday night.

Scheer's main talking points thus far have revolved around several key policy points for the Liberals, including the federal carbon tax, immigration and Canada-China relations.

Speaking in Montreal on Monday, Scheer promised Quebec voters more autonomy over immigration to the province if he's elected in October.

Overall, the party is sharpening its message to Canadians to convince them the Conservatives are ready to topple the Trudeau government.

Deputy leader Lisa Raitt says MPs are hearing concerns from their constituents about the overall state of the country and how it is affecting their personal finances, echoing messaging shared by party leader Andrew Scheer in a series of town halls held across the country over the last few months.

Scheer says Canada 'can't afford four more years of Justin Trudeau'

Conservative Party of Canada leader Andrew Scheer will insist that "ordinary Canadians can't afford four more years of Justin Trudeau," at the Conservative National Caucus meeting in Ottawa on Sunday, while laying out plans for 2019.

MPs and senators are gathering in Ottawa for the three-day retreat, partly to prepare for the reopening of Parliament next week after the lengthy Christmas break. However, it's clear that election is the focus of the excursion.

"The battle for 2019 has already begun," declared an email blast to members ahead of the retreat which will include a number of activities related to campaign strategy and preparedness.

In his address, Scheer focused on balanced budgets, the carbon tax, and the fear that younger generations of Canadians won't exceed their parents' levels of wealth.

The Tory leader has been active in the media over the past few months, likely attempting to enhance his name recognition in comparison to Liberal

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau ahead of a federal election this year.

Scheer has been critical of several of Trudeau's policies, and most recently urged the prime minister to fire the Canadian Ambassador to China, John

Kohli bows out of the series with India undefeated in New Zealand

With India up 3-0, world player of the year Kohli is to be rested for the remaining two matches and the following Twenty20 series. Kohli's 60 off 74 deliveries and a 113-run partnership with Rohit Sharma saw India chase down their 244-run target with seven overs to spare. It gave the tourists back-to-back series wins against Australia and New Zealand and ensured they will be a force to be reckoned with in the World Cup later this year. Sharma top-scored with 62 while Ambati Rayudu was unbeaten on 40 and Dinesh Karthik on 38. New Zealand, batting first, posted their highest score and longest innings in the three matches so far but they still fell short of 50 overs, their last wicket falling with six balls remaining. Ross Taylor (93) and Tom Latham (51) gave the innings credibility but proved no challenge for the visitors. Sharma's first wicket partnership of 39 ended when Shikhar Dhawan edged Trent Boult to the lone slip Taylor to be gone for 28.

Kohli then joined Sharma and the pair swatted the attack around the ground in their century stand for the second wicket. Chahal took the bulk of the wickets in the first two matches. Ish Sodhi proved expensive but Mitchell Santner was tight and cleverly deceived Sharma to finish with one for 45. Santner sensed Sharma was ready to dance down the wicket and served up a slower ball that deceived the opener, who was stumped by Latham. Kohli, who averages a century every 5.6 innings, was due a big knock in New Zealand after posting 45 and 43 earlier in the series, but his attempt to drive Boult to the cover boundary was well caught by a leaping Henry Nicholls. Boult proved the most economical of the New Zealand bowlers with two for 40. Mohammed Shami had earlier taken three for 41 while Bhuvneshwar Kumar, Hardik Pandya and Yuzvendra Chahal took two wickets apiece as India shared around the bowling honours in the New Zealand innings. Only Taylor, and for a time Latham, offered any real resistance after another disastrous start by the top order. Both openers were gone and New Zealand were two for 26 when Taylor went to the middle and Latham arrived at three for 59 with the dismissal of Kane Williamson (28). Taylor and Latham mounted a rescue mission with a 119-run stand for the fourth wicket. But after Latham was dismissed for 51, his 13th half-century, it ignited a collapse in which the last six wickets fell for only 52 runs. Hamilton hosts the fourth game in the series on Thursday.

Qatar blockade hits Asian Cup with UAE-only ticket giveaway would be embarrassing for UAE, and it could get even worse if Qatar allies Iran, who play Japan on Monday, also reach the final. Seeing Iran or Qatar celebrating under their national flag in Abu Dhabi would be hard to stomach for the hosts, and would raise the thorny question of whether to let senior officials from the two countries attend. The regional rivalry has permeated the tournament, which is only available to watch in UAE via Qatar's subscription-only beIN Sports, which isn't available even in official, tournament-approved hotels. Qatar fans will, of course, be watching from afar. Qataris need prior permission to visit UAE, and with transport links cut they also need to travel via another country, complicating the journey. "It's not only me who wants to travel to the match, thousands of Qataris people want to watch the team," Qatar fan Abdulrahman, a 25-year-old IT engineer, told AFP in Doha. "Of course, I won't go. If I go I will have too many problems, it's far too much trouble for us." He added: "If we win we are going to cry. We want to show the UAE that you blocked us, you gave us too many problems, but you will never stop us." It's not all enmity, however. On social media, many fans from both sides were sharing clips and interviews from before the crisis blew up in mid-2017, when people spoke of a united Gulf. "If Qatar wins we will be happy, and if the UAE wins we will also be happy," wrote Ahmed, who had a Saudi flag next to his Twitter handle. "The most important thing is that the cup will be won by a team from the Gulf. We are one Gulf, one nation."

Pakistan bowlers force series decider after Sarfraz ban

JOHANNESBURG: Pakistan shrugged off a four-match suspension imposed on captain Sarfraz Ahmed with a crushing eight-wicket win over South Africa in the fourth one-day international at the Wanderers Stadium on Sunday. The result levelled the five-match series at 2-2. The deciding match will be in Cape Town on Wednesday. Pakistan's bowlers set up the win, bowling out South Africa for 164. Imran-ul-Haq made 71 before playing a loose shot when the scores were level as Pakistan cruised to victory with 18.3 overs to spare. Stand-in captain Shaib Malik said at the after-match presentation that Pakistan only found out after they arrived at the ground that Sarfraz had been banned under the International Cricket Council's anti-racism code for remarks aimed at South African all-rounder Andile Phlehlukwayo during the second match in Durban on Tuesday. The ban had still not been announced by the ICC when Malik walked out for the toss.

Malik handled his bowlers and fielders astutely and South Africa were kept under pressure almost from the time he won the toss and sent them in on a pitch which had early life. "It is a great honour to represent your country, as a player or a captain," said Malik. "When the responsibility comes you should make sure to give it your best shot." Shaheen Shah Afridi made two early strikes before Hashim Amla (59) and captain Faf du Plessis (57) made half-centuries and put on 101 for the third wicket.

leg before wicket with what Shinwari hoped was the hat-trick ball. The ball was crashing into the stumps but Shinwari acknowledged that umpire Bongani Jele had made the right decision because there was a faint inside edge. Du Plessis gave credit to Pakistan's bowlers but said it was not a typical Wanderers pitch. "The ball spun quite a lot and was sticking in the surface," he said. "But you have to adapt. They have fantastic bowlers and they are putting pressure on us." Malik deflected praise for the way the Pakistan players had shown energy and commitment in the field. "Not just today, in the previous games as well," he said. "You need a bit of luck to get across the line. We are all professionals and today our bowling attack did the job and they took wickets." Imam, the top scorer in the series, looked in control from the start of Pakistan's reply. He and Fakhar Zaman (44) put on 70 for the first wicket before he was joined by the in-form Babar Azam, who finished with 41 not out. It was South Africa's first defeat in eight matches on what has become known as 'Pink Day' with their players and many spectators dressed in pink in aid of breast cancer awareness.

Djokovic routs Nadal for record seventh Australian title

MELBOURNE: Novak Djokovic claimed a record seventh Australian Open crown on Sunday as he demolished Rafa Nadal 6-3 6-2 6-3 in his most dominant Grand Slam win in his long rivalry with the Spaniard. The peerless Serb broke Nadal five times at a stunned Rod Laver Arena while conceding only a single break point to clinch his 15th Grand Slam title and third in succession after winning Wimbledon and the U.S. Open. The pair's 53rd Tour clash and eighth in a major final was not the marathon battle it was expected to be, as top seed Djokovic bulldozed through the first two sets with machine-like precision and wrapped up the match in just over two hours. Sealing the win on the second championship point when a desperate Nadal fired a backhand long, Djokovic kneeled on the blue hardcourt and shook his fists at the sky, letting out a roar of triumph. "I am just trying to contemplate on the journey in the last 12 months," Djokovic said basking at the trophy ceremoniously. "Like Rafa, I had surgery exactly 12 months ago, and to be standing now here in front of you today and managing to win this title and managing to win three out of four slams is amazing. I am speechless." Having moved past Roger Federer and Roy Emerson's six titles to take sole ownership of the record, Djokovic took back his mantle as master of Melbourne Park. On the strength of his annihilation of Nadal, a 17-times Grand Slam champion who had entered the final in outrageous form, Djokovic's Australian haul appears set to grow in coming years. Blitzed from the start, Nadal could only congratulate an opponent that condemned him to his worst Grand Slam defeat in their long rivalry. "It has been very emotional two weeks. Even if tonight was not my best, I had somebody that played much better," said the 32-year-old. "I am going to keep fighting hard, going to keep working hard to be a better player every time, for the good things in life." It was a greater humbling than even the quarter-finals of the 2015 French Open, when Djokovic thrashed Nadal 7-5 6-3 6-1 to end the Spaniard's six-year winning streak at his favourite claycourt tournament. A centre court crowd that remembered the titanic 2012 decider, when Djokovic beat Nadal in a record five hours and 53 minutes, was quickly subdued by the Serb's total dominance. Nadal was broken in his first service game as he fired wild and wide when presented with an open court. "It was clear not everything was right with the Spaniard when at 4-2, he swung a forehand and completely missed the ball. Eight games in, Djokovic had yet to lose a point on serve. He finally conceded one when serving for the set at 5-3 but it was the only point he gave up before closing it out when Nadal found the net. Nadal's remodelled serve was quickly under siege, and he punched his racket strings in frustration after giving up two break points in the fourth game. The crafty Serb floated a drop-shot over and Nadal's scrambling retrieval clipped the net cord to give Djokovic ample time to swoop in and collect it. The Serb threw a fiery glance at his players' box after breaking to 5-2 and fired two aces to take a two-set lead. All business, he then marched back to his seat in silence, without so much as a quiet fist-pump. Nadal battled on but every piece of magic he produced was outdone by the Serbian sorcerer.
