Canada's PM was asked for his "nice guy" image and progressive views. But now a scandal is plaguing the former political pin-up.

Canadian leader Justin Trudeau's ex-right hand man defended him in parliament on Wednesday over accusations of meddling in the prosecution of a corporate giant that had placed the prime minister into his worst crisis in office.

Trudeau's Liberal government has been rocked for weeks by the snowfall scandal, which has triggered the resignation of two cabinet ministers and badly tarnished the image of the golden boy premier.

The blow to Trudeau's reputation at home and abroad could be deeply damaging for the Canadian leader, who, since being elected in 2015, had been considered one of the most likeable and trustworthy leaders on the world stage, especially by young liberals who praised his progressive views on, among other things, feminism, climate change and immigration.

(When asked why he had made it a priority to have a half-female, half-female cabinet when he formed his government, he famously replied "Because it's 2015").

WHAT'S THE SCANDAL ABOUT?
 Geny Butts, an architect of Trudeau's 2015 victory and a longtime friend, quit as his principal secretary last month, saying he did not want to become a distraction to the government because of a tough general election in eight months.

Testifying before the House of Commons justice committee on Wednesday, Butts rebutted accusations made by former Attorney-General Jody Wilson-Raybould, whose abrupt resignation last month touched off the crisis.

"I am firmly convinced that nothing happened here beyond the normal operations of government," Butts said.

Corruption scandal could bring down Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau

"If anyone crossed a line, it was the responsibility of the minister to inform somebody about that. And I'm presenting myself as the most likely person that would have been informed, and I was not."

The scandal centres on allegations that Trudeau's inner circle intervened to shield Canadian engineering giant SNC-Lavalin from bribery trial.

The Montreal-based firm faces corruption charges for allegedly paying tens of millions of dollars in bribes between 2001 and 2011 to secure Libyan government contracts under the rule of Muammar Kadafi.

SNC-Lavalin openly lobbied the Canadian government for an out-of-court settlement that would mean paying a fine and agreeing to compliance measures.

A conviction, the company argued, risked crippling its business and putting thousands out of work.

Wilson-Raybould refused to ask prosecutors to settle, and the trial is set to proceed.

Since leaving office, she has told politicians she experienced "consistent and sustained" pressure from Trudeau's inner circle to interfere in the case, including "veiled threats." Trudeau denies the allegations, saying he made clear to Wilson-Raybould that any decision on the case was hers alone.

"When you boil it all down, all we ever asked the Attorney-General to do was to consider a second opinion. When 9,000 people's jobs are at stake, it is a public policy problem," Butts said.

"It was our obligation to exhaustively consider options the law allows ... to demonstrate that (the decision) was taken with great care and careful consideration of their livelihood."

HAS THE SCANDAL REALLY HURT TRUDEAU?
 Support for the beleaguered prime minister and his Liberals has fallen for the first time behind the opposition Tories, a new poll showed on Tuesday, a day after Treasury Board president Jane Philpott became the second cabinet minister to break ranks with Trudeau and quit in protest.

With opposition leaders clamouring for Trudeau to resign - supported by half of Canadians, according to one recent survey - the justice committee and the independent ethics commissioner have both opened investigations.

In testimony before the committee, Wilson-Raybould named 11 government officials, including Butts, saying they "urged me to take partisan political considerations into account, which was clearly improper."

She claims they continued to "hound" her from September to December after she made known her decision not to offer SNC-Lavalin a deal.

That pressure was not illegal, she said, but "raised serious red flags in my investigating the affair but that will take months.

Andrew Scheer, leader of the opposition Conservative Party, has called on Trudeau to resign and is asking police to investigate.

Trudeau's Liberal party has the majority of seats in Parliament as his government cannot be brought down in a vote of no confidence unless his own party members vote against him. Federal elections are being held in October, however, and at least one poll says the Liberals are now trailing the Conservatives by a small margin.

If Trudeau should lose another Cabinet minister before the election his leadership could be called into question and already shaky Liberals could rebel. So far, other Liberal Cabinet ministers are rallying around him.

Time will tell how the scandal influences the country's perception of their leader, and if those who voted for Trudeau in the last election turn against him when Canada goes to the polls in October.

Eighteen Canadians among the 157 killed in Ethiopian Airlines crash

Eighteen Canadians were among 157 people killed Sunday when an Ethiopian Airlines plane crashed near Addis Ababa just minutes after takeoff, authorities say.

It is scheduled to begin on Monday in Nairobi. Four of the passengers were carrying UN passports.

There was no indication of the cause of the crash. The plane was a new Boeing 737 Max 8 with 149 passengers and eight crew aboard. It was the second deadly crash in the past five months involving a newly delivered Max 8. In both cases, the jet crashed within minutes of takeoff.

Among the dead were dozens of humanitarian workers from United Nations agencies and several other relief agencies. Among the Canadian victims was Pius Aedeemsi, director of the Institute of African Studies at Carleton University. "Pius was a towering figure in African and postcolonial scholarship, and his sudden loss is a tragedy," said Carleton University president Benoit-Antoine Bacon.

The plane, headed for Nairobi under clear skies, departed from the Ethiopian capital at 8:38 a.m. local time. Six minutes later, contact was lost. The pilot had alerted controllers that he "had difficulties" and wanted to turn back, and he had been given clearance to return to the airport, the airline's chief executive officer Tewelde GebreMariam told reporters.

A photo released by Ethiopian Airlines showed the wreckage in a huge trench created by the crash in an empty field. Nobody survived the crash, the airline said.

Ethiopian Airlines, at a news conference on Sunday, said the passengers included 32 Kenyans, 18 Canadians, nine Ethiopians, eight Americans, and others from China, Italy, France, Britain, Egypt, the Netherlands and other countries. In total, the victims came from more than 30 countries.

Among the Canadians who died were Amina Ibrahim Odowa and her five-year-old daughter Safiya, both from Edmonton, Ms. Odowa's brother, Mohamed Ali, who lives in Toronto, said the two had been travelling to Nairobi to visit family.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said he was "deeply saddened" by the crash and offered "heartfelt condolences." In a statement on Twitter, he said the crash was "devastating news."

Some of the passengers were reported to be UN staff and diplomats, heading to the UN Environment Assembly, which journalist working for an Ethiopian newspaper, reached the crash site on Sunday and found a horrific scene. "All we could see was body parts everywhere - no bodies, just body parts," he told The Globe in an interview. "It was the saddest experience for everyone. I've never seen anything like it."

Villagers told him that they heard a powerful explosion when the plane crashed. "They couldn't even approach the site because there was so much smoke and flames."

Many Ethiopians are worried that the crash will damage the reputation of Ethiopian Airlines, he said. "It's the pride of Ethiopia and Africa, and people are just so sad that it happened to an airline that has invested so much in safety and new airplanes."

In a statement on Sunday, Boeing said it "stands ready" to support the Ethiopian Airlines team investigating the crash. "A Boeing technical team is prepared to provide technical assistance at the request and under the direction of the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board," it said.

The Boeing 737 Max is one of the world's most popular aircraft, with thousands of planes ordered and delivered to dozens of airlines, including Air Canada and WestJet.

As of January, more than 5,000 of the 737 Max aircraft have been ordered by airlines worldwide, according to Boeing, and 350 have been delivered. A number of them are currently being flown by Air Canada and WestJet airlines.

The 737 Max aircraft were touted as a game-changer for the aviation industry, with greater fuel efficiency than its predecessors, quieter and with more room for overhead baggage.

But investigators have found issues with the aircraft since the Lion Air crash involving a Max 8 in Indonesia last October. Although the cause of that crash has not been determined, investigators said the cockpit data recorder on the Lion Air flight showed that the plane's airspeed indicator had malfunctioned on its last four flights.

Related: Boeing 737 Max 8 under intense scrutiny after two crashes in five months

Boeing issued a safety bulletin to pilots after the Lion Air crash, telling them how to respond to the risk of erroneous data from the sensors on the 737 Max aircraft. The bulletin said the faulty information from a sensor could cause the plane to point the nose down, and it reminded pilots of the procedure for handling such a situation.

Indonesian investigators said an "angle of attack" sensor had malfunctioned and provided inaccurate data on the Max 8 that crashed. The sensor controls the angle of the nose of the airplane, in relation to the current air. Incorrect information can confuse the plane's computer and its pilots, potentially causing the plane to make a sudden dive, the Indonesian investigators said.

Ethiopian Airlines, the biggest and fastest-growing airline in Africa, is considered to have a generally good safety record, with no crashes since January, 2010. Other African airlines, too, have been improving their safety record in recent years. No major accidents were reported in Africa from 2016 to 2018.

Ethiopian, the only airline in sub-Saharan Africa with direct flights to Canada, attracts many Canadian passengers who fly from Toronto to Addis Ababa and then connect to other African cities.

Its airport in Addis Ababa has become a major hub for connections across the continent, with Ethiopian flying to more than 60 destinations in Africa, including relatively isolated cities such as Mogadishu and Asmara. A report last November by a travel analysis company found that Addis Ababa had overtaken Dubai to become the top gateway to destinations in sub-Saharan Africa.

Ethiopian is the largest airline in Africa by revenue and profit, with US$3.2-billion in revenue in the 2017-18 fiscal year. It carried 10.6 million passengers in 2017, after eight years of passenger growth averaging 25 per cent a year.

Ontario police reforms would 'completely subvert' watchdog's independence, director says

The head of Ontario's civilian police watchdog has warned the provincial government that its proposed police reforms would "completely subvert" his agency's independence and open the door to "political interference."

Tony Loparco, director of the province's Special Investigations Unit, says Premier Doug Ford's Bill 68, introduced last month, could "impede the SIU's future ability to conduct timely and thorough investigations" of potential police wrongdoing.

In a nine-page letter to the Ontario Legislature's standing committee on justice policy, which is reviewing the draft legislation, Mr. Loparco calls for changes to the bill's proposed wording of the SIU's mandate, which would restrict the agency to investigating police officers only when an incident "may have resulted from criminal conduct by an officer."

He warns this could expose the SIU to accusations of "anti-police bias," as it requires making a determination before any evidence has been collected. But he also says it means that police chiefs, when considering whether to call in the SIU, will first need to decide if one of their own officers likely committed a crime. (Under the current rules, the SIU investigates any case of serious injury or death or allegations of sexual assault involving a police officer.)

"This would completely subvert the SIU's independence and its police oversight mission," Mr. Loparco writes.

"I strongly recommend that the word 'criminal' be struck from the section. To do otherwise would be to go backwards."

Mr. Loparco, a former Scarborough Crown prosecutor appointed to his post in 2013, also singles out a new provision in the draft bill that allows the attorney general to make regulations "governing the operating policies and procedures" of the SIU.

"Unless circumscribed, this authority strikes at the independence of a law enforcement agency," his letter reads.

Mr. Ford's reforms, announced last month and praised by police unions and chiefs, follow on his Progressive Conservative government's suspension last summer of the previous Liberal government's legislation to strengthen police oversight. His Community Safety Minister, Sylvia Jones, has called the province's government's changes the "most anti-police piece of legislation in Canadian history." The Liberal law, among other measures, would have imposed much higher fines on officers who failed to co-operate with an SIU investigation.

Justice Robichaud, a spokesman for Ontario Attorney General Caroline Mulroney, said in an e-mail that the new legislation would still require the SIU to be notified of any incident of serious injury or death after the use of force by an officer.

The SIU would have the authority to investigate "any incident which may have resulted from criminal conduct by an official, where a person dies or is seriously injured, or where there is a discharge of a firearm at a person, or a report of sexual assault," he said.

The proposed changes, he said, mirror amendments made recently to excuse officers who use force to resolve dispute or resolve a dispute with a person. He also says that the SIU would be required to complete a complex probe, Mr. Loparco writes, noting that in cases involving a death, a postmortem almost always takes six months. He also warns that he expects "further significant cuts" to the SIU's budget.

The time period is so short to complete a complex probe, Mr. Loparco writes, noting that in cases involving a death, a postmortem almost always takes six months. He also warns that he expects "further significant cuts" to the SIU's budget.

They were killed and what they believe the motive may have been, saying the investigation remains active and ongoing.

"We do believe there are people in the community who have information that may assist with the investigation but may have been reluctant to speak to police prior to today," he said.

Lepper said the deaths of Jamieson, Miller and Porter were not being limited "at this time" to the case of Douglas Hill, a Six Nations resident whose body was found in Middlesex County in 2017 - near the spot where the pickup truck was discovered last November. Miller and Hill had been in a common-law relationship prior to Hill's death.

Bomberry and Shipman appeared in court earlier this week. They remain in custody, with their next court appearances scheduled for May 9.

Three people arrested in connection with Ontario triple homicide

OPP officials provide an update on the investigation into a triple homicide near the Oneida Nation of the Thames reserve, in Middlesex Centre, Ont., Thursday, March 7, 2019.

The bodies of Michael Jamieson, Melissa Miller and Alan Porter were found south of London, Ont., on Nov. 4, 2018. The truck they were in had been reported stolen.

Miller was seven months pregnant at the time of her death. Friends have said she, Jamieson and Porter were close friends, and all three had young children.

Arrested in the case are three Six Nations residents - 36-year-old Nicholas Shipman, 30-year-old Thomas Bomberry and 32-year-old Jamie Beaver.

Shipman has been charged with three counts of second-degree murder, Bomberry with two and Beaver with one.

"It saddens me to know that people who call this area home have been charged with ending the lives of three fellow community members in such a tragic way," acting Six Nations deputy police chief Dennis Montour said at the press conference.

Police did not elaborate on the different numbers of charges laid against Shipman, Bomberry and Beaver while speaking to reporters Thursday. Court documents show that Bomberry is accused of killing Miller and Porter, but not Jamieson.

Also alleged in court records is that Jamieson, Miller and Porter were killed on or around Oct. 30, 2018 - nearly a week before their bodies were discovered.

Montour said that Shipman had been in police custody since Nov. 3, 2018, when he was arrested on an unrelated matter.

Kristen Bomberry, a 36-year-old Six Nations resident, was arrested last November on three counts of being an accessory to murder in connection with the deaths.

OPP Det. Ken Lepper declined Thursday to comment on "family relationships, either past or present" between the victims and the accused, or on how Jamieson, Miller and Porter
