چھ باتیں کلانٹس کی

ہم ایک نوجوان ہوں اور بہت اچھی نوکری کرتا ہوں۔ میرے اوپر کافی قرضہ تھا جو میں ریگولر نہیں دے پا رہا تھا صرف ایک ہی مل نظر آ رہا تھا کہ وہ بلیو ہاؤس۔ پھر میری ملاقات صدیقی سے ہوئی اور انہوں نے میری پھر پوری مدد کی اور میرا قرضہ 70 فیصد کم کر دیا اور اب میں اپنا گھر خریدنے کا سوچ رہا ہوں۔

میں بہت زیادہ آنکم ٹیکس دیندا تھا اور اتوں کو ٹیکس سے سوجھی نہیں ملتا تھا پھر آل ڈی بیٹ لوشن نے میری مدد کی میرے مسئلے دوڑنے میں اور اب اپنی زندگی پھر پورا انداز سے گزار رہا ہوں بغیر کسی فکر کے بہت شکر یہ V-K.

میرا ایک بہت اچھا بزنس تھا میرے اوپر کافی قرضہ چھڑا گیا جو مجھے سے برداشت نہیں ہو پا رہا تھا تو میری مدد صدیقی نے کی اور پھر آہستہ آہستہ میں نے اپنے قرضے بھی اتار دیے اور اپنا کاروبار بھی اچھا کر لیا اور اب میں اس قابل ہو گیا ہوں کہ اپنا گھر خرید سکوں۔ S-B.

میرے اور میری بیوی کے درمیان بہت وقت لڑائی رہتی تھی اور ہم ایک دوسرے کو قصور اور جھڑپاتے تھے اپنے حالات کا جبکہ ہم دونوں ہی اچھی خاصی نوکری کرتے تھے پھر بھی بچت نہیں ہو پاتی تھی اور کونکیشن ایجنسی کی کال سے ہم تنگ آ چکے تھے پھر قسمت سے ہماری ملاقات صدیقی صاحب سے ہوئی اور صدیقی کے مشورے اور مدد سے ہم اپنے ان حالات سے نکل سکے اور اب گھر میں بھی سکون ہے۔ کافی عرصہ کے بعد ہم لڑتے بھی نہیں۔ صدیقی صاحب آپ کا بہت شکر یہ۔ G-S & R-S.

Canada ignored its gigantic money laundering problem for years - and lawyers fanned the flames

Diane Francis: Ottawa may have promised reforms in the federal budget, but if it really wants to get serious, it needs to rein in lawyers

Ottawa's budget earmarked about $200 million over the next five years to address Canada's massive money laundering problem. This was promising news, but follows years of neglect resulting in the creation of gigantic laundering networks in Canada, the growth of criminal organizations, increased drug trafficking, housing unaffordability, and few prosecutions.

The budget came on the heels of a critical report by the U.S. State Department in March stating Canada is a global problem and vulnerable to major laundering operations, along with nations such as Afghanistan, the British Virgin Islands, China, Macau and Colombia.

"Canada admits it has a money laundering problem. Now it's pledging to fix it" Toronto housing has become magnet for money launderers, with $28 billion in real estate bought by anonymous owners: study

"Diane Francis: Money laundering by foreigners is what's really destroying housing affordability in Canada Especially undefended, it stated, are casinos, real estate, money services businesses, currency exchanges, wire exchanges, offshore corporations, legal "funnel accounts," and hawala transactions (international transfers between immigrants through agents in South Asia, the Arab world, and parts of Africa, Europe, and the Americas).

Ottawa's new funding will create money-laundering task forces staffed by police and prosecutors as well as CRA teams to audit real estate deals. Funds will also be used to develop expertise in trade-based money laundering, and to ensure support for financial intelligence gathering and sharing. The Liberals are also promising to amend the criminal code to lower the prosecution threshold concerning laundering.

Not only must implementation of all these reforms be rapid, but Ottawa must also rein in the legal profession.

"Lawyers, they're the biggest problem with money laundering in this country, as far as I'm concerned," said Kim Marsh in an interview in 2017. He is the former head of the RCMP's International Crime

Unit and now a security consultant.

In 2015, the Supreme Court of Canada made a huge mistake when it constitutionally exempted lawyers from a newly minted Proceeds of Crime and Terrorist Financing Act and Regulation (the 'Proceeds of Crime Regime'). This followed arguments by the Federation of Law Societies of Canada that laws violated solicitor-client privilege and that the legal profession alone had the responsibility for policing itself.

This puts lawyers above the law compared to other self-regulating professionals. Accountants, doctors, nurses, social workers or teachers are never exempt under the law from reporting abuse or criminality by their clients. This is foolishness.

Besides, the law societies are riven with conflicts and have done a lousy job. For instance, it took five years for the

B.C. Law Society to suspend a lawyer for six months after he allowed $25 million in suspicious transactions to flow through his trust account.

Obviously, unregulated lawyers can enable laundering. And as an unregulated profession, they can sabotage Ottawa's money laundering initiatives, including, notably, to make prosecutions easier and to provide beneficial ownership transparency, so that law enforcement agencies "can more clearly know who owns which corporations in Canada."

Lawyers will continue to set up dummy corporations, and international structures, on behalf of persons unknown without question. And some will continue to "rent out" their trust funds to criminals and kleptocrats, bypassing reporting requirements that others must adhere to.

In 2016, this gap was emphasized by the world's foremost watchdog, the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) launched by the G7 and United Nations and yet nothing changed. The Task Force stated: "All high-risk areas (in Canada) are covered by... measures, except legal counsels, legal firms and Quebec notaries. This constitutes a significant loophole in Canada's framework."

"In light of these professionals' key gatekeeper role, in particular in high-risk sectors and activities such as real-estate transactions and the formation of corporations and trusts, this constitutes a serious impediment to Canada's efforts to fight money laundering (or terrorist financing)," stated the FATF.

Another priority for Ottawa should be enhancing enforcement and prosecutorial capabilities. Given the sheer scale of the problem, the fact that only a handful of indictments and convictions have occurred speaks for itself.

There's no question that Canada is a laggard.

Trudeau threatens libel suit over SNC-Lavalin crisis, opposition says

OTTAWA (Reuters) - The leader of Canada's opposition Conservative Party said on Sunday that Prime Minister Justin Trudeau threatened to sue him for libel over statements made about a scandal that has dogged Trudeau and his ruling Liberal Party for two months.

The Liberals have been in turmoil since former Justice Minister Jody Wilson-Raybould said in February she had been inappropriately pressured to ensure that construction company SNC-Lavalin Group Inc escape a corruption trial.

In a bid to quell the crisis that has hurt his chances for re-election in October, Trudeau last week expelled from the Liberal caucus Wilson-Raybould and former Treasury Board chief Jane Philpott, who also has criticized the handling of the SNC-Lavalin affair.

On Sunday, Conservative leader Andrew Scheer released a letter he said he received a week ago from a lawyer representing Trudeau. It referred to statements made by the opposition leader on Facebook on March 29, which the letter called "beyond the pale of fair debate" and "libelous."

The letter is to be "treated as a notice" and will be referred to "in any subsequent action," it said.

The Conservatives have repeatedly accused Liberals of trying to "interfere in ongoing court proceedings," and have sent a letter to federal police urging them to launch a criminal investigation.

In response to the opposition leader's comments, the prime minister's office said in a statement on Sunday: "Andrew Scheer and the Conservatives have repeatedly made false and defamatory statements. We put him on notice that there are consequences for making completely false and libelous statements." Scheer said the prime minister's complaints were "without merit," adding he hoped the libel case was brought "immediately" because it would mean Trudeau would have to testify publicly and under oath.

"I believe this is an attempt to stifle criticism of Justin Trudeau. This is a bullying attempt to try to prevent me from doing my constitutional duty as leader of the opposition," Scheer told reporters.

Although far from routine, Canadian political leaders have sued rival politicians for libel in the past for remarks made outside Parliament, where comments are immune from prosecution.

Wilson-Raybould says officials urged her to overrule prosecutors who insisted SNC-Lavalin must face trial on charges of bribing Libyan officials between 2001 and 2011. The firm wanted to take advantage of a law passed last year allowing it to escape with a fine.

Trudeau has denied any wrongdoing, saying he and officials had wanted to make sure Wilson-Raybould understood the potential for job losses if SNC-Lavalin were found guilty.

1 dead, 2 injured after multi-vehicle crash in Toronto's east end

Toronto police say a woman is dead and two other people are injured following a three-car crash in the city's east end on Saturday morning.

Officials said they received reports of a collision in the area of Victoria Park and Finch avenues around 10:45 a.m.

Authorities found two people suffering from serious injuries, one of whom was trapped in their vehicle.

A woman was later pronounced dead on scene and a man was transported to a trauma centre with non-life-threatening injuries.

Paramedics said another man was transported to hospital with minor injuries. Images from the scene show extensive damage to all three vehicles involved in the crash and debris strewn throughout the roadway.

There is no word on what caused the crash. Toronto police's collision reconstruction team is now on the scene investigating and roads are closed in the area.

A parliamentary committee is set to shine a light on the shadowy business of military intelligence

Joint Task Force X. It's a mysterious codename with a touch of Cold War cool.

And it might become more familiar to Canadians in the coming months as the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians begins, bit by bit, to peel back the curtain of secrecy around military intelligence activities.

The joint task force, headquartered in Kingston, Ont., is home to Canada's military spies, otherwise known as "source handlers" and "interrogators," all of whom support operations abroad and at home.

The parliamentary committee, a creation of the Liberal government, has a mandate to review the intelligence activities of the country's security organizations.

A censored version of its first annual report, handed to the prime minister in December, will be tabled in Parliament this week and released publicly on Tuesday. The report will include a special focus on military intelligence, arguably the most shadowy of the federal government's shadow services.

In fact, the committee already has signalled that a further review of National Defence's "collection, use, retention and dissemination of information on Canadian citizens" will be one of its priorities in the current year.

Wesley Wark, a University of Ottawa professor and one of the country's leading experts on intelligence, said he's not inclined to speculate on what's motivating the committee - but suggested it clearly has spotted something of concern.

"They saw something concerning" "There was something triggered in their first investigation in 2018, which has led them to this more focused investigation in 2019," he said.

"They saw something concerning, you know, whether it's information that's collected on Canadians in the course of overseas military operations, or counterintelligence operations or operations within Canada or recruitment or training. I mean, there's a wide field of possibilities."

CBC News asked for an interview with the head of the committee, Liberal MP David McGuinty, but he refused, as did the commander of the Canadian Forces Intelligence Command, Rear Admiral Scott Bishop.

What few Canadians might realize is that the military is home to the largest intelligence organization in the federal government, in terms of sheer numbers. And while precise figures are hard to come by, it's also believed to be the country's second-best-funded intelligence organization.

Still, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), the country's civilian spy agency, and the Communications Security Establishment, the federal government's electronic eavesdropping and cyber-service, together capture most of the public attention - and controversy. Calls for oversight

There have been quiet but persistent calls over the years for review, and possibly even oversight, of the military intelligence branch. Until the creation of the parliamentary committee, the branch saw scrutiny only from the chief of the defence staff and occasionally the Department of National Defence's chief of review services.

During the Afghan war, then-defence minister Peter MacKay ordered specific, classified reviews of the army's handling of human intelligence sources on the ground. The detailed findings have never been released.

Then-auditor general Sheila Fraser noted in 2009 that National Defence had "created one of the largest intelligence capabilities in the government" when it overhauled the military intelligence branch in 2004, and yet "there was still no dedicated independent review of National Defence's intelligence functions."

Wark said the committee, with its ability to examine classified information, should go some distance toward alleviating those concerns.

Canadian spies abroad It's important to point out that military intelligence is not allowed to spy on ordinary Canadians and its mandate is limited to Canadian Forces operations at home and overseas.

And while it's operating at home, the military usually plays a subordinate role to civilian authorities, such as the RCMP or Public Safety.

Ford government's 1st budget to feature child-care rebate, sources say

During campaign, Ontario PCs promised partial subsidy of daycare costs, even for high-income families

"campaigning on making child care more affordable and accessible, while ensuring parents have the flexibility and choice to make the best decisions for their family."

Ontario Premier Doug Ford's government is poised to make a child-care rebate a central feature of its first budget, CBC News has learned.

Sources close to the government say the Progressive Conservatives intend to reveal the rebate on daycare costs when Finance Minister Vic Fedeli tables the budget on Thursday.

The PCs promised the rebate during last year's election campaign. It's one of the few Ford campaign promises that is laid out in fine detail, as it was adopted wholesale from former PC leader Patrick Brown's platform, dubbed the "People's Guarantee."

The sources could not say whether the daycare rebate to be presented in the budget will be exactly what the PCs previously promised.

Ford's spokesperson is neither confirming nor denying the plan.

"We can't confirm tax changes that may or may not be in the budget," Simon Jefferies, the premier's director of media relations, said in an email to CBC News. He said Ford and the PCs o$3,750 per child aged six to 15. o$8,250 per child with a severe disability.

"The rebate would be provided as a refundable tax credit rather than a tax deduction, so even if a parent pays no income tax, they would still receive money from the government."

"The current income tax deduction for child-care expenses would be eliminated. While the PCs indicated the rebate would be geared to income, critics have said the structure proposed would unfairly benefit upper-income households."

"Households whose annual income is less than $35,000 would get the maximum rebate of 75 per cent of their child-care costs."

"A family with annual household income of $52,850 would get a 60 per cent rebate."

"A family with household income of $136,925 would get a 57 per cent rebate."

"A family with household income of $200,000 would get a 28 per cent rebate. For a family that has one child under six, this means the maximum refunds would be:

"$5,400 if household income is $55,000. "$5,400 if household income is

$95,000. "$5,130 if household income is $135,000. "$2,520 if household income is $200,000.

There is significant doubt about how much the program would cost.

When Brown promised the rebate, PC officials pegged the cost at $389 million a year. Ford used that precise figure in his list of campaign promises.

However, a detailed analysis published in January by the non-partisan C.D. Howe Institute think-tank puts the initial cost at more than double that figure: $945 million a year.

The researchers say the net cost to the government will gradually shrink as the rebate encourages more parents to return to the workforce, resulting in more provincial income tax revenue. But even factoring that in, the study still pegs the net annual cost at $871 million in the short term, and $588 million 10 years from now.

Brown promised that the rebate would not go to anyone with a household income above $200,000. Ford's announcement did not include that caveat.

Ford also did not promise to follow through with Brown's pledge to create 100,000 new daycare spaces.

The PCs promised that all forms of child care - whether provided by licensed daycare facilities, in-home child-care providers, nannies or babysitters - would be eligible for the rebate.

Saudi retaliation against Canada during feud detailed in government memo

The fallout from Saudi Arabia's move to punish Canadian companies was felt within a month of the countries' sudden diplomatic feud last summer, leading to visa rejections, a government ban on food from Canada and a blockage of shipments at the kingdom's ports.

A newly released federal document provides a close look at Saudi Arabia's retaliation against Canada, following criticism by Foreign Affairs Minister Chrystia Freeland on Twitter of the regime's arrest of women's rights activists.

Angered by the public condemnation, Saudi Arabia suspended diplomatic ties with Canada last August, expelled the Canadian ambassador and recalled its own envoy from Ottawa.

The kingdom also stopped future trade and investment deals, cancelled grain imports and said it would shut down lucrative scholarships for its citizens to study in Canada. The Saudi central bank and state pension funds started selling their Canadian holdings.

A briefing note to International Trade Minister Jim Carr offers more detail on how events were unfolding on the ground about a month after the start of the dispute.

"It is important to note that over the last few days Global Affairs Canada has been learning of concrete actions taken by Saudi Arabia against Canadian companies across various sectors," reads the memo, released this week to the Canadian Press under access-to-information law.

The document went on to list numerous measures, including: "Requests for existing contracts to be replaced by new contracts with non-Canadian suppliers."

"Denial of access to military bases. Payment delays."

"Re-routing of flights for product supplies."

"Prevention of a Canadian company from importing and selling medication."

"Government ministries issuing orders to ban food and medication from Canada. "Various shipments from Canada being completely stopped at Saudi ports. The note was created last September for Carr in preparation for his meeting with members of the Canada Arab Business Council, who have interests in the kingdom.

The additional details of the dispute with Saudi Arabia emerge as Canada tries to manage other, bigger trade-related challenges with its two largest partners, the United States and China.

No rapprochement yet for former key partners

Saudi Arabia has previously been a key partner for Canada in the Middle East and, according to a separate internal briefing note, the countries had more than $4 billion worth of trade in 2017. That year, Saudi Arabia had $1.28 billion worth of direct investment in Canada, said the memo prepared for Finance Minister Bill Morneau after the crisis broke out.

Scott Jolliffe, the president of the Canada Arab Business Council, said in an interview that Saudi investment in Canada ground to a halt last August. He also said Canadian firms have been restricted from bidding on new projects in the kingdom.

On the other hand, he said things have mostly carried on as usual for those of his members who already had business in the country. Jolliffe also said he hadn't heard of any visa refusals.

He said he would like to see the impasse resolved because Saudi Arabia and the region offer billions of dollars' worth of potential business for Canadian companies - and possible alternatives to the U.S. There's a deep need there, he added, for the expertise Canada offers in areas like infrastructure, telecommunications and engineering.

"At the moment, it doesn't appear as if there is much going on to strengthen and rebuild the relationship," said Jolliffe, who's had meetings with Carr about the issue.

The feud has had an impact on agriculture. Feed-barley producers, for instance, have been shut out of the Saudi market.

"Any country we lose, even if it's temporary, hurts us," said Dave Bishop, a farmer and chair of Alberta Barley.

He said Canada had been shipping about 122,000 tonnes of feed barley to Saudi Arabia every year - amounts that can sometimes reach 10 per cent of all Canadian exports of the product.

This year, the industry has been lucky that feed barley is in short supply worldwide and extra demand from markets like China has helped make up for being shut out of Saudi Arabia, Bishop added.

Alia Bhatt starrer Sadak 2 to go on floor in May 2019

In September 2018, Mahesh Bhatt confirmed his comeback as a director with Sadak 2 announcement, a sequel to Sadak. It is a major casting coup with sisters Alia Bhatt and Pooja Bhatt coming together for the first time for a film. Along with them, the film will see Sanjay Dutt and Aditya Roy Kapur as well. While the film is yet to go on floors, we finally know when we can expect the shooting to begin.

Alia Bhatt, who is currently promoting her film Kalank, has revealed that Sadak 2 will commence from May 2019. When asked during an interaction, Alia said, "I will start shooting next month."

It was recently revealed the makers of Sadak 2 will also recreate the iconic romance ballad 'Tumhe Apna Banane' in the film. The original song was picturized on Sanjay Dutt and Pooja Bhatt in Sadak. The original ballad was sung by Anuradha Paudwal.

Coming back to Sadak 2, Aditya Roy Kapur and Alia Bhatt will reportedly essay the role a young couple. Meanwhile, Sanjay Dutt will be reprising his original role as Ravi. A Mukesh Bhatt Presentation of a Mahesh Bhatt Film, Sadak 2 is a Vishesh Films Production and is slated to release on 25th March 2020.

Will Smith grooves to Student Of The Year 2 song Radha

Last year, Hollywood actor Will Smith visited India. Will visited several places in India during his holiday and also worked with Student Of The Year 2 star cast Tiger Shroff, Tara Sutaria and Ananya Panday. The main purpose of him visiting India was to complete his bucket list and to feature his visit on his show titled as Bucket List. The episode went live yesterday and it definitely made for an interesting watch.

In the episode, we see Will shake a leg to the song Radha teri chunri. The actor also goes on to say that these moves are different from hip hop. As soon as he enters the set, he tells us why Bollywood is different from other film industries and how important and fun it is to be part of it.

Student Of The Year 2 is the second part of Karan Johar's Student Of The Year, which starred Alia Bhatt, Varun Dhawan and Sidharth Malhotra in the lead roles. Dharma Productions is producing the sequel being directed by Punit Malhotra.

Chris Pratt - Priyanka Chopra starrer Cowboy Ninja Viking gets delayed

Cowboy Ninja Viking starring our desi girl Priyanka Chopra and Jurassic World actor Chris Pratt has been indefinitely been delayed. Film's release schedule has been pulled from Universal Pictures release schedule. The film which was earlier scheduled for its release on June 28, 2019, has now been updated.

The same was confirmed in a report by Hollywood reporter which said, "One month before production had been slated to start, Universal has removed the Chris Pratt action vehicle Cowboy Ninja Viking from its release calendar and delayed production indefinitely, though the film remains in active development."

It's said that Priyanka Chopra walked out of Ali Abbas Zafar's Bharat for this film. Even though the film has been delayed, a Hollywood portal reports that Chris Pratt, Priyanka Chopra, and MacLaren will remain on board for the Universal production. The report said, "Insiders say the studio delayed the film rather than rushing it out to make the June 28 deadline."

Cowboy Ninja Viking is based on the Image Comics graphic novel by A.J. Lieberman.
