Canada and U.S. agree to expand preclearance options for travelers, goods

OTTAWA - A new agreement between Canada and the United States will soon allow travellers and cargo to pre-clear customs before they leave, allowing an easier movement of people and goods crossing the border.

Canadian air travellers have been able to clear customs before flying to the U.S. for decades at Canadian airports, letting them skip lines upon when they land in the United States.

The two countries have agreed to add U.S. preclearance operations at Billy Bishop airport in Toronto and Jean Lesage airport in Quebec City.

The new agreement extends preclearance for travellers crossing by land, rail and sea. Early stages of planning are underway for preclearance for train passengers travelling from Montreal into New York and on the Rocky Mountaineer railway to British Columbia, which extends into Washington state.

Preclearance operations will be expanded to additional airports, and will, for the first time, allow preclearance of cargo travelling across the border.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and President Donald Trump announced Thursday that they intend to implement the new preclearance agreement this summer as part of a deal that has been in the works for years.

"Delays at the border can easily disrupt operations for Canadian and American business owners, so we want to remove some of these obstacles to expand trade while keeping our people safe," Trudeau told reporters Thursday.

"(The preclearance agreement) is going to ensure our border remains safe as we move forward with greater back-and-forth of our goods and our people. That is something that is fundamental and essential to Canada."

Trudeau didn't say when travellers will see the new measures in place.

The agreement was first announced in 2015 but required a number of regulatory changes in both countries before it could be enacted. Canada passed its legislation in 2017.

While air travellers flying from several Canadian airports have long been able to clear U.S. customs before going to the United States, flyers going from the United States while Canada have not. Canada could have implemented a similar model to the one used by the U.S. but has chosen not to.

Information obtained through access-to-information law shows Canada has taken a cautious approach, weighing a number of factors including economic benefits and competitiveness, traffic flows, space constraints at airports, national-security considerations and financial implications.

Decisions on how and where the newly expanded preclearance measures will be rolled out will also be based on a "careful assessment of the benefits and costs of preclearance at specific locations for passengers and cargo," said Scott Bardaley, a spokesman for Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale.

Sites chosen for preclearance are voluntary and market-driven, he added.

As for when cargo preclearance will get underway, Bardaley said Canada will proceed gradually, using pilot projects. One has already been launched at the border checkpoint between LaLoelle, Que., and Rouens Point, N.Y.

Canadian border officers have been pre-screening rail cargo by viewing x-ray images of aerobound rail cars on the U.S. side, using imaging technology already in use by American officials who screen rail cars bound for the U.S.

"As part of this pilot, American border officers capture x-ray images of the rail cars bound for Canada and then Canadian border officials flag any possible irregularities and then process the goods in Canada."

"The pilot will form the basis of proof of concept for any future cargo preclearance operations in the U.S.," says a briefing note prepared for Goodale in September 2018.

Canada must prepare to defend itself in an increasingly 'volatile' world, says new military personnel chief

The new head of Canadian military's personnel branch delivered a sobering assessment of the international landscape on Thursday, and of how unstable relations among countries have become.

"Our splendid isolation that we have enjoyed for so long in Canada is a thing of the past," said Lt.-Gen Wayne Eyre, who has for the last year served as deputy commander of the United Nations Command in Korea.

"Being immersed in the Asia-Pacific region has really driven home just how volatile the world is becoming."

What has been most unsettling, he said, is "the reality that there are major powers out there that care nothing for our peace (and) prosperity and will undermine it without blinking an eye" if it gets in their way.

He did not single out any nation in particular, but China has been locked in a number of disputes with its neighbour. The growth of Beijing's military power throughout the region - in part through its construction of artificial, fortified islands, and its dismissal of international arbitration on their status - has increased the tensions.

The remarks - made at a change of command ceremony Thursday in Ottawa, where Eyre took over from retiring lieutenant-general Chuck Lamerre - came on the day it was revealed that a Canadian warship and supply vessels had transited the Strait of Taiwan in a freedom-of-navigation exercise.

More and more, Western nations are challenging China's claims to those waters - and the journey of HMCS Regina and the MV Asterix through the Strait joined a growing list of similar demonstrations.

Eyre's speech also came as the threat of a military clash between the United States and Iran seemed to be ramping up.

But it was Eyre's position as second-in-command of the UN headquarters in Korea that gave him a front row seat to the tense nuclear standoff with North Korea, and the attempts by the international community to enforce a blockade of the rogue nation following a spate of nuclear and ballistic missile tests.

He sums up what that taught him - and how it translates to his new job as Canada's top recruiter and manager of military personnel - in one sentence: "We really do need a mindset of being ready to fight tonight."

The military, Eyre said, is the "nation's ultimate insurance policy" - but it needs the right people and the right personnel system.

A veteran of Afghanistan and Bosnia, Eyre takes over the human resources role at a watershed time for the Canadian military. The Forces are grappling with the human cost of the five-year combat mission in Kandahar, which has seen a tide of medical releases, and is trying to stamp out - once and for all - sexual misconduct within the ranks through Operation Honour.

A recent Statistics Canada report revealed recently that, despite over four years of sustained pressure, the number of women and men in the military who identify themselves as victims of sexual assault and harassment has remained constant.

Eyre was reluctant to talk about the specifics, saying he is returning to Korea next week to close out his old posting and will comment more fully on his new job later this summer.

It was left to Lamerre to defend the military's record under Operation Honour, which he said "gets a lot of criticism, but in reality it is the only program of its kind anywhere in Canada."

He pointed to New Zealand, which has adopted a similar program for dealing with sexual harassment cases in its military.

Iraqi Kurds ask Canada for military training, equipment after being frozen out

Canada is being invited to once again provide training to Iraq's Kurdish security forces, who would shoulder the burden with Canadian soldiers in the war against the Islamic State group before being frozen out in 2017.

Bayan Sami Abdul Rahman, Iraqi Kurdistan's top diplomat in Washington, insisted that people don't harbor any ill will toward Canada for suspending and later ending years of military assistance to the Kurdish military, called the peshmerga.

"Yet with the Kurdish government working on a major reform of the peshmerga to ensure they are better able to defend the region from ISIL and various other threats, Abdul Rahman said Canadian assistance would be welcome.

"We are committed to it because we recognize that Kurdistan needs a professional, national, unified military," she said. "This reform program is long term... Canada would play a role in many aspects of their reform program."

The decision to end assistance to the peshmerga followed an outbreak of violence between Kurdish and Iraqi government forces in October 2017 over control of oil-rich territory in the north of the country, inherited from the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant.

Prior to that, Canadian special forces had for three years trained and advised the Kurds in the defence of their semi-independent region from ISIL before working together to free large swathes of territory from ISIL's grasp.

The federal Liberals recently extended Canada's military mission in Iraq through 2021, with much of the focus on training Iraqi military forces through NATO and other partnerships.

With ISIL no longer a direct threat to the Kurds, it's understandable that some coalition partners have shifted their focus," Abdul Rahman said in an interview during a recent visit to Ottawa. "So there's no resentment or anything like that."

Abdul Rahman also indicated the peshmerga would still like millions of dollars in promised Canadian weapons, which have been stuck in Limbo since assistance was suspended. She acknowledged they likely won't be delivered.

And she hopes Canada will follow other countries in upgrading its diplomatic office in the Kurdish capital of Erbil as part of a broader expansion of ties with the region.

"Problems are numerous."

Whether Canada helps the peshmerga or continues working with Iraqi government forces, Abdul Rahman said the priority is that it remains engaged in Iraq at the country remains extremely fragile despite ISIL's military defeat last year.

There has been a tendency by the international community over the years to leave Iraq to its own devices after helping deal with a major crisis, she said, without addressing the root causes of the crisis.

Such a scenario played out after the U.S. and its allies withdrew from Iraq in 2011, which Abdul Rahman says contributed to ISIL's rise as various forces inside the country were left to fester.

"When Iraq is in crisis and there's something big going on, then there's attention," she said.

"Then whatever the problem was is kind of fixed. Not completely, but it's patched up, and then Iraq will muddle through. But muddle through with a ton of problems that are bubbling away under the surface."

These problems are numerous right now, Abdul Rahman said, with ISIL insurgents provoking the country or languishing with their families in internment camps while more than 1.5 million people remain in refugee camps.

Ethnic and religious rivalries also continue to cause problems even as foreign countries try to exert their influence and many Iraqis have expressed frustration with the slow pace of reconstruction, which has manifested itself in protests.

Canada has provided foreign aid to help alleviate some of these problems, including the provision of services for refugees and internally displaced people, which Abdul Rahman said was welcome.

But she suggested more is needed from the international community to support the children of ISIL fighters, many of whom remain stuck in camps with little hope for the future and run the risk of being radicalized.

Ontario students raise concern as OSAP funding changes take effect

Many post-secondary students across Ontario are coming to terms with a much gloomier financial outlook this week.

On Wednesday, the Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP) gave applicants an estimate of the amount of money they would receive from grants and loans to fund their education for the next school year.

Shortly after, OSAP started trending on Twitter as students fired off a flurry of tweets criticizing the changes made by the Ford government earlier this year.

"Some students are concerned about whether they will be able to return to university," president of the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance Catherine Dunne told Global News Radio 980 CFTL.

"A lot of students are recognizing that, in order to finance the rest of their degrees and post-secondary education, they're going to have to take on significantly more (debt) than they're used to."

Dunne noted that the spectre of the added financial burden will weigh on

Students' Council at Western University, predicted that the reduction in OSAP funding will have a lasting impact as students move past their time in post-secondary education.

"They may have to delay really significant purchases in their lives," she said. "I think of things like homes, cars, depending on what type of jobs they can get after graduation."

"When students don't have financial security when they're attending post-secondary (school), that means that they have to work longer hours or they're troubled by the amount of debt they can take on, which does have significant impacts on mental health," she continued.

Dunne, who is also the vice-president of the University

"All these things are going to be impacted by their student debt."

Former minister of training, colleges and universities Merrilee Fullerton - who has since been shuffled to the long-term care portfolio - issued a statement addressing the backlash on Wednesday evening.

"Students and their families make great sacrifices to pursue post-secondary education," Fullerton said. "This is why our government introduced an unprecedented 10 per cent reduction in college and university tuition fees."

She added: "The auditor general's 2018 report showed that OSAP expenses would increase to over $2 billion by next year. In order to address the previous government's unsustainable spending, in January our government announced we are restoring financial sustainability to OSAP to ensure the program supports the students who need it the most for years to come."

In January of this year, the Ford government announced several changes to post-secondary school funding, including axing free tuition for low-income students and eliminating a six-month, interest-free grace period for OSAP repayment for graduating students.

"During this investigation, the vehicle of interest fled from the plaza and officers followed it," the SIU said in the release.

In the intersection, the vehicle struck the vehicle containing the man and the woman. Debris was strewn on the road.

Initially, police said the driver of one of the vehicles fled the scene, but now, police say they will not comment further because the SIU is investigating. Neither the police nor the SIU have said whether or not the driver being investigated has been arrested.

The SIU has assigned five investigators, two forensic investigators and one collision reconstructionist to the case.

The agency investigates events involving the police that have resulted in death, serious injury, or reports of sexual assault.

Anyone who has information about the case is urged to call the lead investigator at 1-800-787-8529. Anyone who may have relevant video evidence is urged to upload it through the SIU website.

Olympic sprinter Dutee Chand wants Kangana Ranaut to do her biopic

Olympic sprinter Dutee Chand was in the news recently after she revealed her sexual orientation saying that she is in a relationship with a girl. In a recent interview with a leading daily, the sprinter even shared that a lot of filmmakers have been approaching her to buy the rights for her biopic. However, she hasn't given a nod to anyone yet. "I have got requests from so many filmmakers who are keen to make my biopic, but I haven't given the nod yet. Apart from Anil Kapoor and Rakeysh Mehra, a lot of actors and actresses have independently reached out. With the number of requests coming my way, I'm glad that my story hasn't hit the ground yet. When she was questioned about who according to her would be apt to portray her on the big screen, she said, "I think Priyanka Chopra did a very good job in Mary Kom. While I don't know who will eventually be selected, I think Kangana Ranaut can portray me perfectly on screen. I like her as an actress."

Well, Kangana got to know about Dutee's wish and when she was asked to react on it, the actress said, "That's very kind of Dutee. I am humbled that she feels I am worthy of playing her." Well, we hope something materializes soon.

World Cup 2019: Indian cricket team inspiring others to stay fit says Fitness trainer

The Indian cricket team players are leading by an example in fitness trends are followed, encouraging others to follow suit, feels renowned fitness trainer Jag Chima.

"I have noticed that there are a lot of cricket players who are following these trends and open businesses encourage more people to use gyms to improve their fitness," Jag Chima, CEO and co-founder, Physique Global and Kris Gettin Gym, told IANS in an interview.

"Fitness is extremely important in sports. The reason is that you can optimize your performance, enhance and also train to avoid injuries. For example, the cricket teams are now leaning from international trends and training in the gym will definitely improve their performance."

"Hence most teams around the world who are performing well will have their teams train in gyms with specialized trainers so that they can get better results," he said.

Led by Virat Kohli, who takes a lot of pride in staying fit, the Indian team members currently taking part in the World Cup in Britain are fit and sound as well as the gym.

Recently, the Indian team was forced to work out in private gyms in the UK as the ones in the team hotels weren't adequate.

About Indian attitudes towards fitness, Chima said, "I've average Indian is much more fitness conscious today than they were a year ago and much more than they were 5 years ago. The reason for this is, a huge influx of movie stars are now showing fitter physiques on the big screen which is inspiring a lot of youth."

"Also there are now many gyms that are providing education across the country, helping people to live a fitter and healthier lifestyle, which is great. Because India does have one of the highest populations in the world who are obese. Also the highest population of children who are obese. Therefore it's very important for us to spread education so that people can live a fitter and healthier lifestyle."

Chima is the founder of The London Group, a diversified conglomerate with extensive

6 Indian female footballers to travel to France for WC

Six women footballers from here will board a flight to Lyon, France on June 28 to participate in women's football World Cup 2019, a highlight of the FIFA Women's World Cup this year.

The team from Yaws has been invited as one of 40 other delegations from across the world representing leading 'Development through Football' organizations. The festival will run from June 29 to July 6.

Yaws Festival 19 team is backed by BookASmile, the charity initiative of India's leading entertainment destination BookMyShow. BookMyShow launched BookASmile in 2014 with a vision to support special causes and enrich the lives of the less fortunate across India through 'Entertainment-led Experiences'. BookASmile has been supporting Yaws's football for empowerment programs since 2015.

Yaws's women will be hosted by Sport dans la Ville during the FIFA Women's World Cup France 2019 for a festival of football, fair play, and culture. The festival will feature a street football tournament played by 'football rules' designed to promote tolerance and youth leadership as well as an educational and cultural exchange program.

The festival will be organized jointly by the street football world and Sport dans la Ville. The stars of the festival are 240 young people (aged between 15 to 18 years) from disadvantaged communities all over the world and who have earned their place on the pitch through their commitment to changing the world through football.

Yaws's team, who are all coaches of girls as well as footballers themselves, will be leading a special workshop for all of the other delegations on gender equality through football, building teams and an inclusive environment for girls.

Priyanka Chopra showers love on Sophie Turner ahead of her second wedding with Joe Jonas Priyanka Chopra and Nick Jonas reached Paris yesterday ahead of Sophie Turner and Joe Jonas's second wedding. Joe and Sophie had their first wedding in May, tying the knot in a surprise ceremony held at a Las Vegas chapel just hours after the Billboard Music Awards. The couple was married by an Elvis impersonator. Priyanka and Nick were seen making a super stylish appearance in the city together. Chopra was seen wearing a grey pantsuit with a plunging neckline. She complemented her look with white high heel boots and a pair of sunnies. Nick was seen complimenting her in red.

Ahead of Sophie and Joe's second nuptials, Priyanka was seen bonding with niece-in-law Sophie Turner. The actress took to her social media handle to share a picture with her.

She captioned it as, "Tier" with heart emoji Sweet! Even Joe Jonas posted a romantic picture of him and Sophie. In the same, the two can be seen posing with the Eiffel Tower in the background.

Aaron Finch happy with Australia's form ahead of England clash

Defending champions Australia are currently placed second in the points table for the 2019 World Cup and skipper Aaron Finch believes that trusting one's own abilities has been the key to his side's success in the recent times.

Ahead of Australia's clash against England in the showpiece event, Finch pointed out that the change in the composition of the side has also helped the team. In 2018, England first brushed Australia 4-1 in their own backyard and then beat them 5-0 at home.

"I tried last year to beat them at their own game and it wasn't very successful. We came up pretty short in that series. That was having someone in an inexperienced group at the time, there was a lot of change in the one-day side at the time," Finch was quoted as saying to the ICC.

"When you've got an inexperienced group, it can hit them a bit harder. It's tough to play someone else's game, you have to be true to your game plan and what your style is," he added.

The Australian skipper also felt that his team has shown improvement in every department of the game. "I think we've got the balance well and truly right, we're playing some really good cricket with bat and ball, we're talking really well. Overall we're improving nicely," he opined.

Meanwhile, Finch also credited their head coach and former Aussie improved Justin Lange for the team's progress performance in ODI cricket.

"I definitely played a part in it. Guys that have been around a while and played a lot of one-day cricket, you sensed that that's not a sustainable way to play our one-day cricket," he said.

Finch also believed that hosts England have been a consistent side in recent times which has been their key to success.

"When you look at England over the last four years, they've been bloody consistent, so you can't read a huge amount into it. What we've talked about the whole tournament is if you let your guard down, or your mind a bit too far forward, any team can beat you on the day," he concluded.

England, who have garnered 4-0 wins from six games, are set to take on Australia at the Lord's on June 25.
