OTTAWA—After campaigning and coming to power on a promise of change, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the Liberal Party will be heading to your doorsteps this summer seeking a second term.

After nearly four years of Trudeau government, here's how the country looks different today than it did in 2015.

The world took note in 2015 when Trudeau strode up the driveway at Rideau Hall with 15 men and 15 women who would form the country's first-ever gender-balanced federal cabinet.

Since taking that first step, the Liberals under Trudeau have: moved to legalise gay marriage in the federal sector, made the national anthem gender-neutral, enshrined in law protections for transgender people, and required gender-based analysis to be conducted on major policies.

The Liberal government also has pledged to increase international aid spending to support women's health and promoted the status of women portfolio to a full department for Women and Gender Equality (WAGE).

These are all changes that may be hard for future governments to walk back without considerable criticism and explanation.

Longtime Liberal and principal at Bluesky Strategy Group, Susan Smith, said the tone set by the first cabinet roster "had huge reverberations in corporate Canada, in Canada writ-large."

"It forced the rest of the country to take a little bit harder look at what they were doing, and force the rest of the country, not by dictate but by emulation, like if the prime minister can do it, why can't we?... It's helped the country progress," she said.

Though, room for improvements remains.

Trudeau's self-imposed title as a feminist has come into question over the course of his mandate, including over the acrimonious ouster of two top female MPs from the Liberal caucus: Jane Philpott and Jody Wilson-Raybould amid the SNC-Lavalin affair.

And if Canada wants to see gender parity reached in the House of Commons, that could take another 89 years at the current rate that female MPs needed election but were not on the shelves until mid-December.

From bringing in more than 40,000 Syrian refugees, to the infamous "Welcome to Canada" tweet, a central focus of the Liberals' last four years has been immigration. In 2018 Canada resettled more refugees than any other country. While this embrace of asylum seekers, refugees, and immigrants hasn't been without issues, the target for millions of new Canadians in the coming years will have a real and lasting impact on the country.

"To those fleeing persecution, terror & war, Canadians will welcome you, regardless of your faith. Diversity is our strength. #WelcomeToCanada," Trudeau tweeted in January 2017.

This message was seen in part as an effort to differentiate Canada from the increasingly closed-off approach to immigration of the U.S. administration under Donald Trump.

Critics have referred to that tweet as the catalyst for the stream of asylum-seekers crossing irregularly into Canada, resulting in a backlog of people waiting to be processed, overwhelming the system and resources.

Former director general of the citizenship and immigration department, Andrew Griffith, told CTVNews.ca that the surge in asylum seekers has posed the greatest challenge to this government on the immigration file, but he doesn't think it undermined the "Welcome to Canada" message.

"The Canadian experience is definitely one of generosity and has Conservative government viewed climate change as a thorn in its side. It avoided the subject to the greatest extent possible and acted only when it was forced to act. However, the government across the aisle promised to do things differently. It promised action on climate change, but it was all words and little action," said Conservative MP Melanie Gallant during the climate change emergency debate. The motion passed in the end, without the support of Conservative Leader Andrew Scheer or his party.

All this said, it's looking more and more likely that climate change will become a campaign issue in a bigger way than ever before, and while there are contrasting approaches to tackling it, the Liberals' focus on it has led all sides now saying that it's a real and present threat.

As one of their first acts in government, the Liberals restored the mandatory long-form census, citing a commitment to evidence-based policies. Former Conservative prime minister Stephen Harper eliminated the national survey of Canadians in 2010 and instead issued a voluntary National Household Survey that had a significantly smaller response rate.

The decision to conduct the long-form census was heralded as a win for informed decision-making, and representation of the diversity in Canada.

In a recent interview with CTVNews.ca, Peggy Tallon, former head of the Canadian Council on Social Development—which led the charter challenge to save the census—said this move will have a lasting impact on Canada's ability to measure the effectiveness of government policy and hold those who make these decisions to account.

The revived census was issued in 2016, and brought to light new information about Canadian demographics, including revealing a historically high proportion of the show how welcoming refugees really contributes to Canada's economy and communities and we hope that Canada can continue to play this leadership role." UNHCR's Melanie Gallant recently told CTV News in relation to the UN report stating that Canada resettled more refugees in 2018 than any other country.

On the global front, the Liberals' handling of the international trade file and desire to open new markets merits an honourable mention. While the Liberals didn't come to power on a promise of a renegotiated NAFTA, Trump's insistence forced Canada's hand, and prompted the push to look for other trading partners.

One of the central focuses for this government has been on climate change. It was the first time climate change has been noted in the cabinet file.

McKenna flew to Paris for the 2015 United Nations Climate Conference where she joined representatives of 195 countries in signing the Paris Agreement, which population over the age of 65. The census also revealed that there are over 7 million people in Canada for whom neither English or French was their first language, and that four out of five First Nations communities have median incomes below the poverty line.

"If you are a city government trying to determine whether or not to build a fire hall, should we close down a library? You make use of the census data," former Chief of Statistics Canada Munir Sheikh told CTV News at the time the census was restored. "If you are a business you can use the long form census data to determine whether or not you want to open a store in a new area, the kinds of goods you want to stock. There are many uses of the long-form census data that those who provide Canadians with goods and services."

The next census is scheduled to be conducted in 2021.

In 2014, as then-leader of the third party, Trudeau removed all Liberal senators from the national Liberal caucus, and since becoming prime minister he has embarked on creating a non-partisan Senate, with a new and independent advisory board to recommend Senate appointments.

Within three years the Liberals filled the outstanding vacancies in the Upper Chamber led by former prime minister Stephen Harper, and Independent Senators now make up the majority in the Senate. That will largely remain the case now that the only opportunities for new appointments will be when existing senators reach the age 75.

The Independent Senators Group (ISG) formed by a handful of senators in 2016 to promote a "functioning independent, non-partisan Senate" currently hold 59 seats, 30 senators are still part of the Conservative caucus, nine are so-called "Senate Liberals" without ties to the party caucus; and another six senators consider themselves "non-affiliated" with any group.

The Senate's increasing independence has provided a new dynamic rarely seen in past Parliaments: amendments to government bills. What was once seen as a rare and dramatic occurrence happened 30 times this Parliament.

There were 38 pieces of government legislation that the Senate sent back to the House with changes, and in 35 of those the government accepted some of the suggested alterations, according to the facilitator of the ISG Yuen-Pao Woo.

"This is a testament to the added value brought to the Upper Chamber by independent senators and their diverse backgrounds and expertise," he said in a statement when the Senate adjourned for the summer.

"We know that the Senate is less partisan, more independent. We've never had a government accept more amendments from committees in the House, let alone the Senate," Government House Leader Bardish Chagger told reporters at the tail end of this Parliament.

The transition hasn't been without skeptics. The Liberals still have a government representative in the Senate, and Tory senators are quick to point to the voting records of some of the Independents as being more often than not aligned with the Liberal position. Lobbying targeting the Senate has also increased over the last four years because, now more than ever, members' votes could be swayed on any issue.

"I call the Senate the island of unintended consequences now," said senior vice president at Prof Strategies and former Liberal staffer Greg MacEachern. "But for what it eliminated, did it create more problems in terms of trying to pass legislation? We don't know yet. The Senate is taken much more seriously, there's some very thoughtful people there," he said.

Contaminants, allergens: Hundreds of food shipments from China seized by Canada

Between Jan. 1, 2017 and Feb. 29, 2019, inspectors detected problems with 889 foods or food ingredients into Canada from China, but only four food shipments were refused entry, records show.

OTTAWA - Canadian inspectors intercepted nearly 900 food products from China over concerns about faulty labels, unmentioned allergens and harmful contaminants that included glass and metal between 2017 and early 2019, according to internal federal records.

The document provides an inside look at imports from China that caught the attention of officials for appearing to fall short of Canadian standards - from gum balls with "extraneous" metal, to three-minute chow mein that contained an insect, to spicy octopus feet flagged for a "non-specific" hazard.

The list, compiled by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, was obtained through a access-to-information law. Its release comes at a time of significant public interest in Canada about cross-border food inspections, especially those involving China.

The scrutiny of agricultural goods has been central to a diplomatic dispute between Canada and its second-biggest trading partner. Bilateral frictions have intensified since the December arrest of Huawei executive Meng Wanzhou in Vancouver and China's subsequent detention of two Canadians on espionage allegations.

The governing Liberals have come under pressure from rival Conservatives to respond by taking a harder line when it comes to Chinese imports.

In recent weeks, China asked Canada to suspend all its meat-export certificates to the Asian country after Chinese customs inspectors detected residues from a restricted food additive, called ractopamine, in a batch of Canadian pork products. A statement by China's embassy in Ottawa said the investigation uncovered at least 188 forged veterinary health certificates and argued the Canadian government should take a tougher line on imports from China. The list also does not include comparable numbers for Canada's other trading partners.

'That's not how we do things in Canada': Trudeau stops short of calling Trump's tweets 'racist'

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau today denounced tweets sent by U.S. President Donald Trump over the weekend that told a series of first-term congresswomen of diverse ethnic backgrounds to "go back" to their countries of origin rather than tell U.S. politicians how America should be governed.

Trump's tweets on Sunday ignited a political firestorm in the U.S. and have been widely denounced as racist, as only one of the four Democrats he targeted - frequent critics of Trump who have called for his impeachment - was born outside the U.S.

Rather than apologize, Trump said Monday that Representatives Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York, Ilhan Omar of Minnesota, Rashida Tlaib of Michigan and Ayanna S. Pressley of Massachusetts should instead apologize to him, the United States and Israel for what he claimed was their "foul language & racist hatred." He said the politicians have "made Israel feel abandoned by the U.S."

Speaking at a press conference with Jens Stoltenberg, the secretary-general of NATO, Trudeau said today that sort of talk is unwelcome in Canada.

"I think Canadians and indeed people around the world know exactly what I think about these particular comments. That is not how we do things in Canada. It is a Canadian. It is a Canadian. It is a Canadian. The diversity of our country is actually one of our greatest strengths and a source of tremendous resilience and pride for Canadians and we will continue to defend that," Trudeau said.

Trudeau did not say whether he'd personally define Trump's call for the four representatives to "go back and help fix the totally broken and crime infested places from which they came" as racist.

Ocasio-Cortez has denounced Israel's "occupation" of Palestinian territory while advocating for cuts to U.S. foreign aid for the Middle Eastern country. Omar has been accused of using negative and harmful stereotypes of Jewish Americans. Tlaib, the first Palestinian-American congresswoman, has compared the Israel-Palestine situation to past racial segregation in the U.S.

U.S. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, the highest ranking Democrat in Congress, said the president's comments suggested Trump was advocating white nationalism.

Canada over that period, CFIA's quarterly reports show.

An agency spokeswoman said CFIA investigates concerns to determine if it's a hazard or fails to comply with Canadian standards. When necessary, she said officials take action - including minor label corrections, recalls, product seizure, entry refusals and the cancellation of licences.

Agriculture Minister Marie-Claude Bibeau said in an email statement that the issues in the CFIA list do not necessarily correlate to a particular problem with imported food products from foreign countries.

"This is a list of cases reported to the CFIA that informs operational and follow-up activities to verify compliance and take any appropriate actions, in accordance with laws and regulations," Bibeau said.

The Canadian food safety system is strong and recognized as one of the best in the world and the government is confident in all products approved by the CFIA as safe for local consumption as well as for export.

"The list only provides numbers for China and does not include comparable numbers for Canada's other trading partners."

Conservative Leader Andrew Scheer recently called on Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to stop "importing all products from China and to consider slapping tariffs on imports."

"When @realDonaldTrump tells four American Congresswomen to go back to their countries, he reaffirms his plan to 'Make America Great Again' has always been about making America white again," she said in a tweet.

In response, Trump said Pelosi's tweet was "very racist... that's a very racist statement. I'm surprised she'd say that."

During a press conference at the White House Monday, Trump denied the tweets were racially motivated and said it was rather an attempt to denounce "socialist" congresswomen who frequently complain about the state of affairs in America.

Trump said that he thinks these congresswomen "hate our country" and announced he isn't afraid to "take them on."

"If you hate our country, if you're not happy here in the U.S., if you're not happy the way I do this that's what I say all the time... If you're not happy in the U.S., if you're complaining all the time, very simply, you can leave, you can leave right now," Trump said. "Come back if you want, don't come back, that's OK too but, if you're not happy, you can leave."

Canada, the fourth biggest oil nation, may be the world's least energy secure

Peter Tertakian: We could be a court ruling in Michigan, or a cruise missile in Iran, away from oil.

Cheap, clean, safe and secure. Whether it's petroleum products, natural gas or electricity, that's how we like our energy.

But we never really satisfied, are we? Our wallets feel picked by the monthly utility bill. Only a perpetual motion machine will ever be clean enough. And we question safety over extremely low probability events.

I'm being facetious, of course, but what about energy security? That's the instinctual knowledge in modern society that the lights go on when you flip the switch. Security is the comfort that the furnace will fire up for an Edmonton winter and the gas pump will have ample fuel when you pull up to fill up.

When our energy systems fail to deliver that when we panic. Ironically, when it comes to oil supply, Canada could be one of the least energy secure countries in the world.

Say what? Canada, the fourth largest producer of oil in the world, a country that exports just over two times more petroleum than it consumes, is vulnerable to shortages?

Travellers could get up to $2,400 if they are bumped from an overbooked flight under Canada's new air passenger protection rules

$2,100 if their luggage is lost or damaged under new regulations that start today.

Canadian airlines will be required to compensate passengers for lost luggage or getting bumped from overbooked flights under a new air passenger rights regime that comes into effect Monday despite industry efforts to quash the rules in federal court.

As of July 15, the Canadian Transportation Agency's air passenger protection regulations will impose standards on airlines when it comes to communicating, overbooking, tarmac delays, lost luggage and transporting musical instruments.

Disgruntled travellers could get up to $2,400 if they are bumped from an overbooked flight or $2,100 if their luggage is lost or damaged. Effective December, airlines must also compensate passengers up to $1,000 for delays or cancellations within their control.

The new rules have proven controversial for industry players and consumer advocates alike.

The International Air Transport Association, along with 18 other plaintiffs including Air Canada and Porter Airlines Inc., argue the rules breach international obligations and exceed Canada's authority, according to a federal court application asking a judge to declare the regulations invalid.

In particular, the legal case led by the IATA - a trade association that represents 290 airlines - argues the rules are inconsistent with the Montreal Convention, a treaty adopted in 1999 that unified rules regarding international carriage by air.

Airlines are also not happy about the proposed compensation levels.

The application argues carriers will face steep costs without proof of any damage to the passenger in question.

It used overbooked flights as an example. It noted that passengers denied boarding when a flight is full are entitled to $900 if they arrive at their destination up to six hours late, $1,800 for six-to-nine-hour delays and $2,400 if they're more than nine hours late, even though there could be very real differences in the damages sustained by someone 30 minutes late versus five hours and 59 minutes.

The government has yet to issue a formal response to the legal challenge, although earlier this week it confirmed plans to respond.

Some, however, argue the provisions do not go far enough. Advocacy group Air Passenger Rights has pushed back against the allowance from abroad to feed Sarina from the Gulf of St. Lawrence. But that's only not true.

Line 9 flows the wrong way now, from Sarina to Montreal. It was reversed in 2015 for economic reasons, since North American oil became cheaper than offshore oil-another coincidence.

If there is any comfort in this emerging story it's that the U.S. Midwest refineries east of Lake Superior will also be negatively impacted should Line 5 be cut. So, there may be a Michigan-Ontario debate of mutually-assured economic destruction.

Yet, there is more. A few weeks ago, we were informed that Iran was a hair trigger away from being bombarded by a U.S. military strike. Such action could have cut off the Straits of Hormuz, through which 20 per cent of the world's oil traverses. It's not a stretch to believe Iran would be retaliated by lobbing missiles into oil infrastructure of its arch-rival, Saudi Arabia. The risks were high that this vital oil "choke point" that supplies much of the world could have choked.

Anyone who lived through the 1970s (like most) knows what happens when vital energy supplies are disrupted. People's behaviour changes (not for the better), governments act emergently and everyone starts hoarding. Self-preservation is in our DNA.

Yet if Americans cut Line 5, they'd cut off Sarina.

Another pipeline, Line 9, could theoretically come to the rescue. Built in 1976 as a security alternative, it connects the Sarina complex to Montreal. Should Line 5 be cut, foreign oil tankers could bring oil for up to three-hour delays on the tarmac and argues the new rules fall short of European Union passenger rights standards when it comes to delays caused by maintenance issues.

Still, the Canadian Transportation Agency plans to move forward with the rules next week, which could provide some clarity in the marketplace.

"Against a backdrop of previous ad hoc rulings from the Canadian Transportation Agency, it is important that Canada's airlines have a clear understanding of passenger protection requirements, standards of care and potential penalties," said Robert Kokonis, president of consultancy AirTwin.

But Kokonis said legislation must not inflict disproportionate harm on carrier passengers.

"In other cases, costs will likely be passed on to customers through ticket prices, because the (regulations) are being imposed in a country that is already one of the most expensive aviation jurisdictions in the world for taxes and fees," he said.

Spokespeople for Canada's two largest airlines, WestJet Airlines Ltd. and Air Canada, both said they will be prepared for the new regime come Monday.

Priyanka Chopra ends her 15-year court battle with former secretary

Priyanka Chopra's former secretary and manager Prakash Jauja who had filed a lawsuit against his star-client in 2004 for breach of contract, has decided to call a truce. The two had been fighting a long hard court battle for 15 years now. In a surprise move they've both decided to step back and let bygones be bygones.

While details of the out-of-court settlement are not known yet, one does remember how determined Prakash Jauja was to get justice for himself. In 2014 a film entitled 67 Days was announced in which Jauja

Parineeti Chopra opens up about alleged boyfriend Charit Desai

Parineeti Chopra is not one to talk openly about her personal life in public. She stays away from controversies and link-ups and keeps her path clear of any gossip about her personal life. But like no one can keep clear of the gossip mills for long, Parineeti's love life caught attention a while ago when rumours of her dating Charit Desai did the rounds. Charit is an assistant director at Dharma Productions and a very close friend of Parineeti. Rumour had that she had allegedly dated Prakash and Nick Jonas' wedding in Jodhpur, though no one ever openly admitted to it.

We have no control over rules of game says Eoin Morgan

England skipper Eoin Morgan said players "do not have control over the rules" set by the ICC after the governing body's much-criticized boundary control rule decided the winners of the 2019 World Cup.

However, he had no intention of questioning the rules set by the governing body, slammed as "ridiculous" by former cricketers.

"When sorting of two attempts to separate them with a winner and a loser it still doesn't perhaps sort of shine with one side coming through, you know," Williamson said, summing up.

BCCI to invite fresh applications for support staff, Shastri will have to re-apply

The BCCI will soon invite fresh applications for the Indian cricket team's support staff, including the head coach, and incumbent Ravji Shastri will need to re-apply once his contract expires after next month's tour of the West Indies.

The support staff comprising Shastri, bowling coach Bharat Arun, batting coach Sanjay Bangar and fielding coach R Sridhar were given a 45-day extension following the World Cup, covering the West Indies tour from August 3 to September 3.

After the West Indies tour, India's home season kicks off with the series against South Africa beginning September 15.

Shastri was appointed India's chief coach in 2017 after Anil Kumble's tenure ended prematurely in controversial circumstances.

The 57-year-old was also India's director of cricket from August 2014 to June 2016.

However, India has not won a major ICC event under his guidance through the team did make history by winning a maiden Test series in Australia earlier this year.

The job openings will put up on our website in a day or two. Besides the support staff, fresh applications will also be invited for the post of team manager," a BCCI official told PTI.

Former Tamil Nadu captain Sunil Subramanian was appointed team manager in 2017 on a year-contract but he got an extension.

It was the first time that the BCCI had followed a management procedure for hiring the team manager, in accordance with the Lodha committee recommendations.

Selectors to pick squad for West Indies tour on July 19, no clarity on Dhoni's future yet

The Indian team for next month's tour of West Indies will be announced on July 19 but there is no clarity over the future of Mahendra Singh Dhoni ahead of the limited-overs leg beginning August 3.

Dhoni's future has been widely speculated ever since India lost to New Zealand in the World Cup semifinal on July 19. The 38-year-old is expected to make an announcement on it in the coming few days.

"The selectors will meet in Mumbai on July 19. We have not heard from Dhoni but what is relevant is the communication between the player and selectors. If you ask me, Dhoni did well in the World Cup but he is his own man. Only he can decide whether he wants to carry on or not," a BCCI official told PTI after the Committee of Administrators' meeting.

Skipper Virat Kohli and pace spearhead Jasprit Bumrah are expected to be rested for the limited-overs leg comprising three T20s and as many ODIs before returning for the two-Test series starting August 22. The five-day matches will be part of the inaugural World Test Championship.

Former greats like Sunil Gavaskar had questioned the BCCI for allowing the likes of Dhoni and Shikhar Dhawan to skip domestic cricket in the run-up to the World Cup.

"The question arises that who is allowing the players to pick and choose? Are they taking the call themselves or are they informing the selectors?" The general feeling is that there needs to be better communication on this issue," said another BCCI official.

"You can't pick and choose. Most World Cup-bound players played all games of the IPL and did not ask for rest back then," he added.
