Canada's Public Health Agency president resigns amid rising coronavirus cases

Tina Namiestowski, the president of the Public Health Agency of Canada, has resigned leaving the Agency in charge of leading country's response to the coronavirus without a leader, amid rising cases of the virus in some of Canada's most populous provinces.

In a letter to staff released by PHAC, Namiestowski said she needed "to take a break" and "step aside so someone else can step up" to lead the public health agency tasked with coordinating Canada's response to COVID-19. Namiestowski was appointed to the job in May 2019.

Her resignation comes as case counts of the virus have surged in Ontario, B.C. and Quebec and criticism about the federal government's response to the virus in the early stages of the pandemic has mounted.

"This is a very difficult decision for me but I think it's the right one," Namiestowski said. "You really need someone who will have the energy and the stamina to take the Agency and our response to the next level."

"Even though I might not have accomplished everything I would have liked to have done, I truly hope the foundation for change I've championed through our work on PHAC of the future will help serve as a road improving forward."

According to her LinkedIn profile, Namiestowski worked as the executive vice-president of the Canada Border Services Agency and served as an assistant deputy minister at Agriculture Canada and Public Safety Canada.

"I will support the transition of a new President and then I am going to take some time to reconnect with my husband, kids and aging father and think about my own next steps," she wrote. "I do want to remind everyone that how much of a toll this relentless pace can have on each of us and our loved ones so please try and look after yourselves and each other."

PHAC, which Namiestowski formally headed, faced criticism over a depleted national emergency stockpile of personal protective equipment (PPE) and reports that the Global Public Health Intelligence Network (GPHIN) - a federal pandemic early warning system - was shut down last year.

Namiestowski said in her email Friday, "It is hard to believe that close to ten months has elapsed since the Agency picked up the initial GPHIN signal on December 31st, 2019, about a cluster of cases

Canada's green agenda not hijacked by COVID-19: environment minister

OTTAWA - Environment Minister Jonathan Wilkinson said the pandemic hasn't hijacked the government's "big green agenda," and warned that if left unaddressed climate change will have more of an impact on Canadians than COVID-19.

Wilkinson admitted that the government's priority is dealing with the pandemic, but said they will be thinking about the investments they must make "in the context of the looming crisis that is climate change."

"At the end of the day, if we do not address the climate issue, the impacts that we will feel down that will be significantly greater than what we're feeling from COVID-19," Wilkinson told Evan Solomon during an online exclusive interview with CTV's Question Period.

Speaking to reporters as he announced his intention to prorogue parliament in August, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said the throne speech will give the government an opportunity to build a recovery plan that allows Canada to "take back better."

"This is our chance to build a more resilient Canada, a Canada that is healthier and safer, greener and more competitive, a Canada that is more welcoming and more fair. This is our moment to change the future for the better," Trudeau said at the time.

However, insiders have told The Canadian Press that the throne speech will have fewer mitigation measures to protect Canadians' health and to prevent another lockdown, economic support through the pandemic, and even a health budget increase.

With the focus on the pandemic agenda, questions are circulating about the level of green investment that will actually be borne out of the looming throne speech. Green Party Leader Elizabeth May is among those skeptical outlooks.

Speaking to Solomon on Wednesday during an episode of CTV's Power Play, May said she's made it clear to the prime minister that if he plans to leave real climate action out of the throne speech, he won't be getting her party's support.

"I made it very clear to the prime minister: without commitments that we live up to the requirements of the Paris Agreement... we can't vote confidence," May said.

"When Joe Biden calls Donald Trump a climate anarchist, I don't want to be calling Justin Trudeau a climate anarchist. He's got a little bit of that left."

Further raising the concern that the pandemic might be putting green initiatives on the back burner, the Liberals have also failed to plant a single one of the two billion trees they pledged to get in the ground over the next 10 years.

When pressed on the delay, Wilkinson admitted the pandemic has been a factor in slowing the re-planting efforts.

"The two billion trees commitment remains, it will be something that we will be looking at doing going forward. As you well know, we didn't have a budget for your because of the pandemic and we've been living with this pandemic for six months," said Wilkinson.

Canada confirms 873 more coronavirus infections as cases continue to surge

Canada has again reported 873 more people with the novel coronavirus, bringing the country's surging case count to 143,527 on Sunday.

Provincial and territorial health authorities reported six more people had died from the virus, although those numbers are incomplete as British Columbia, Alberta, Prince Edward Island, the Yukon and Northwest Territories did not report updates over the weekend.

Since the pandemic began, 9,217 people have died from COVID-19 in Canada, while 124,691 have recovered from the virus after falling ill. So far, more than 7.8 million tests have been administered across the country.

Twenty new cases and no new deaths were reported in Saskatchewan. A total of 1,807 infections have been diagnosed there since the pandemic began. Of those, 24 patients have died and 1,643 have recovered.

Health officials have administered 171,945 tests so far.

In Manitoba, provincial health authorities detected 29 new confirmed cases of the virus, though one previously announced diagnosis was removed from the total. Overall, the province has recorded 1,586 cases.

As of Sunday, the province had administered 164,177 tests in total, while 1,216 people had recovered after becoming infected and 16 people had died.

Ontario has diagnosed 46,849 people with the virus, including 365 announced Sunday along with coronavirus deaths. In total, 48,514 people have been tested, 65 have died and 1,021 are in recovery.

Newfoundland and Labrador saw no new cases of COVID-19 reported Sunday. The provincial total remains at 272, while health authorities said a total of three people had previously died from the virus.

N.L. has conducted more than 37,738 tests for COVID-19, while 264 people have recovered from the virus. Nobody in the territory has died from the virus.

All five confirmed cases in the Northwest Territories have also recovered. However, a spokesperson from the

Walmart Canada to end its price-match program

TORONTO—One of the country's largest retailers, Walmart Canada, will no longer offer its price-matching program on Oct. 15.

In a statement, the company said they will be discontinuing their ad match program due to a decrease in usage and delays at checkout.

"Over time, we have seen minimal usage of our Ad Match program, while at the same time the program has been causing delays at the checkout. As a result, we are discontinuing our Ad Match program in all stores and on Walmart.ca effective Oct. 15," the statement said.

A spokesperson confirmed to CTVNews.ca over the phone that the change is not COVID-related and Walmart Canada will be emphasizing their savings pricing program known as "rollbacks."

According to their website, stores across Canada will continue to accept coupons but price-matching will only be accepted up until Oct. 15.

The only price-match that will continue to be accepted at the retailer is for items from their online store, however some limitations may apply.

Business groups warn 'clock is ticking' for Canada-U.K. trade deal

With only three months to go, business and trade groups in Canada and the United Kingdom are worried about not having a post-Brexit deal in place.

Although the United Kingdom left the European Union in January, the terms of the EU's Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement (CETA) with Canada continue to apply until Dec. 31, offering a bit more time to negotiate a bilateral replacement deal.

But not that much more. "As the U.K. and EU's transition period nears its end, the clock is ticking," reads a joint statement Monday from the Confederation of British Industry and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. "The benefits of CETA are at risk if a trade deal is not in place by the end of the year."

On Sept. 7, British Trade Secretary Liz Truss said trade talks with Canada had "commenced."

In fact, negotiations have been on and off for several years. Canadian officials never really walked away, but they did hit pause when Britain's journey toward independent trade policy hit bumps.

According to International Trade Minister May Ng's office, officials now are working toward a "transitional agreement" to minimize disruptions for businesses and workers.

The U.K. hopes to finalize its terms of trade with the EU at a summit next month. It believes other trading partners now have enough clarity to proceed with their own deals - and indeed some have, including Japan earlier this month.

CETA has been good for both countries, the statement said, boosting two-way trade by about 10 per cent over its first two years.

That's why they're calling for a bilateral deal to replace it "at the earliest opportunity."

A transitional agreement with Canada in the short term won't be the same as a customized, bilateral agreement. That would take longer than three months to conclude.

It would, however, prevent the two countries from "crashing out" of CETA, offering a stop-gap measure until both sides have the time and capacity to negotiate something more bespoke.

Ng confirmed that Canada and the U.K. are back at the table while taking questions during a webinar Monday morning hosted by the Canada-EU Trade and Investment Association to mark CETA's three-year anniversary.

The minister said she is "very hopeful" and it's her ambition to reach a transitional agreement "before we restart" for Brexit.

"That will set the stage for a more comprehensive [free trade agreement] with the U.K.," she said. "The most important thing for me right now is stability for Canadian businesses... It's our job to make sure that we do our level best to accept that that environment for them."

First announced last February, British prime minister Theresa May's government originally hoped to "roll over" - meaning extend, with only minor tweaks - as many European Union trade agreements as possible, including CETA.

They were close in early 2019. A proposal to extend CETA had gone to Justin Trudeau's cabinet.

But in late summer of that year, British business sectors' harassed by a looming "hard Brexit" (exiting the EU's customs union without deals to replace its benefits), May's government announced dramatic global tariff cuts that made Canada think twice about whether to let some of its CETA concessions stand.

When Boris Johnson took over as prime minister, his government shifted its focus to negotiating new bilateral trade agreements with countries that didn't previously have trade deals with the EU, like the United States.

Last May, the U.K. upped its ante and published a new list of tariffs on imports from countries like Canada if agreements weren't reached.

But negotiations with Canada did not immediately ramp up, with Canadian officials warning more certainty on Britain's trade terms with the EU.

1st elementary school in Ontario closes after students, staff test positive for COVID-19

An Ottawa elementary school has become the first in Ontario to close due to COVID-19 concerns after two staff members and two students tested positive.

Parents with children at Monsignor Paul Baxter Catholic School in Ottawa's Barrhaven neighbourhood were notified about the closure on Saturday.

It's also the first school to close in the nation's capital.

Follows High School in Pembroke, Ont., became the first in the province to close because of an outbreak of COVID-19 after staff members tested positive last week.

"Please know that we take our direction from Ottawa Public Health," Mark Kennedy, principal of Monsignor Paul Baxter, said in a letter to parents and guardians. "We have been working closely with OPH

Two students at St. Leonard School in Manotick, one student at Holy Spirit School in Stittville and one student at Holy Cross School near Mooney's Bay have all tested positive for the virus.

Monsignor Paul Baxter is the first school to shut its doors, however. "Of course, we all want to do everything we can to help ensure our students' and staff's safety," Kennedy wrote in the letter.

While the school remains closed, the principal said since the vast majority of students are healthy, the school wants them to continue learning online while at home.

The board isn't sharing information about the individuals who tested positive, citing privacy concerns.

A spokesperson for Ontario Education Minister Stephen Lecce confirmed Monsignor Paul Baxter is the first elementary school in the province to close.

Kalki Koechlin comes out in support of ex-husband Anurag Kashyap

Kalki Koechlin and Anurag Kashyap were married to each other at one time. Even after getting divorced, the duo has remained on good terms and have always shared each other during the big days of their lives. Actress Payal Ghosh has levelled allegations of sexual assault against him. In such a grave situation, Kalki stood up for her ex-husband and spoke about how he has always fought for women and their rights. She supported him on social media saying, "Dear Anurag, don't let this social media circus get to you, you have fought for the freedom of women in your scripts, you've defended their integrity in your professional space as well as in your personal life. I have been witness to it, in the personal and professional space you have always seen me as your equal, you have stood up for my integrity even after our divorce, and you have supported me when I felt unsafe in a work environment even before we got together. This strange time where everyone gets to abuse one another and make false claims without any reprisals is a dangerous and regular one. It is destroying families, friends and countries. But there is a place of dignity that exists beyond this virtual blood bath, a place of paying attention to the needs of those around you, a place of being kind even when no one is looking, and I know you are very familiar with that place. Hang on to that dignity, stay strong and keep doing the work you do. Love from an ex-wife."

YRF to announce his massive projects with SRK, Salman Khan, Ranveer Singh once theatres open

There has been a lot of speculation about Aditya Chopra's announcement of his massive slate that will mark the 50th year celebrations of Yash Raj Films. According to trade goss, he has collaborated with some of the biggest stars like Shah Rukh Khan, Salman Khan, Ajay Devgn, Ranveer Singh, Randeep Kapoor, Katrina Kaif and others. We can now confirm that Aditya Chopra has decided to announce his YRF Project 50 slate in theatres because he wants to bring people back to cinema halls. A source said, "This is a massive move by Aditya Chopra. While the media and entertainment industry is reeling with the coronavirus pandemic and there is no fixed date when the theatres will reopen, Adh has decided that he will wait for the theatres to restart and do his entire slate announcement in cinema! Adh is backing the exhibition industry completely and he wants people to see the biggest slate announcement from the biggest production house on the planet!" The source added, "If you go by the line-up that Aditya Chopra has for YRF Project 50, you will see the biggest line-up of superstars and he is clear that he wants to tell people to return to the theatres for that intrinsic, immersive movie-watching experience. Theatres are key for the movie industry and Adh wants to tell people that YRF movies are only meant for big screen experience. It is also a very subtle reminder to everyone that no YRF film will come on digital. This is definitely a huge

John Abraham starrer Satyameva Jayate 2 to release Eid 2021!

In 2018, John Abraham starrer Satyameva Jayate won the audience's heart and earned big bucks at the box-office. No wonder, the makers then decided to turn it into a franchise. The makers announced today that Satyameva Jayate 2 would hit the screens on Eid, May 12, 2021. The film will be helmed by Milap Zaveri this time around. This time however, John Abraham will take down corruption in the town of Lucknow, instead of Mumbai. Speaking about changing the location of the film from Mumbai to Lucknow, Milap says, "Creatively we changed the script to Lucknow as it gave us a chance to make it more massy and also make the canvas larger. Visually also Lucknow adds the scale and grandeur. The action of this film is gonna be ten times more dynamic, heroic and powerful. John is going to smash, rip and annihilate the corrupt like he never has before on the silver screen." Playing the female lead in Divya Khosla Kumar and the director among the actresses, "Divya is going to wow audiences with her power-packed scenes, dramatic prowess, grace and beauty. Satyameva Jayate 2 like part one is a film of the masses and also a celebration of action, music, dialogue-based, patriotism and heroism. And Eid is a perfect occasion to release it as it will offer entertainment galore." Producers Ekhasan Kumar and Nikhil Advani too are excited about this and are sure that the sequel will surprise the audience with its content. Well, looking at John flaunting his abs in the poster, we sure can't wait for the film's release.

MCA Apex Council member urges BCCI to hold Mushtaq Ali tournament in Mumbai

Mumbai Cricket Association Apex Council member and noted cricketer Nadeem Mehta has urged the BCCI to organize the Syed Mushtaq Ali trophy here saying the city has enough grounds to host the domestic T20 tournament. In an e-mail to BCCI chief Sourav Ganguly, Mehta said, "Mumbai should be given responsibility to organize the Mushtaq Ali Tournament. We can start with BCCI Mushtaq Ali Tournament season 2020 in Mumbai." He reasoned that the city has six good quality cricket stadiums with all the facilities and also has good hotels. "Mumbai has six good quality stadiums ground with all facilities and good hotels. All cricketers/officials/safety will be taken care, as per the BCCI guidelines. Mumbai has organized in February/March 2020 All India Women's BCCI One Day tournament successfully in 20 days," wrote Mehta. "We need to think positive and

David Warner: Hope 25 Per Cent Crowd Is Allowed For India-Aus Series

Australia opener David Warner wants to see "at least 25 per cent crowds" inside the stadiums when they host the first Kohli's India in a high profile test later this year. Warner said he was looking forward to the big ticket assignment against one of their biggest rivals. "Well, I am looking forward to the test which will be a great battle between two very highly competitive teams. And, I hope at least 25 per cent crowds will be allowed as was the case with recent football matches. That will be fantastic," Warner said during a virtual media interaction.

IPL 13: Here's What Fans Can Look Forward To From Chennai Super Kings And MS Dhoni

The 2020 edition of the Indian Premier League (IPL) is all set for a blockbuster opening with defending champions Mumbai Indians rearing their long-standing fabled rivalry with seasoned franchise Chennai Super Kings on Saturday evening at the Sheikh Zayed Stadium. Both sides have played a total of 29 matches against each other, but MI have dominated the rivalry, having won 17 times. More than an 'El Clasico of IPL', fans are eagerly awaiting the return of MS Dhoni, who has retired from international cricket. Dhoni's eight appearances in the finals and a staggering 100 per cent qualification record to the tournament play-offs - CSK's overall record in the IPL has been phenomenal. Ahead of the tournament opener which also on the Star Sports network and Disney+ Hotstar, CSK would be keen to avenge their 2019 IPL final loss against the Kolkata Knight Riders. Following the three-time IPL champion, fans can look forward to from CSK in this

For the record, Mumbai is one of the worst COVID-19 affected cities in the country with over one lakh cases. Cricket in the city has come to a grinding halt since March. The MCA has three grounds - Wankhede, BKC and Sachin Tendulkar Gyrfalaka in Kandivli. Then, there is DY Patil Stadium in Navi Mumbai and Dadaji K Stadium in neighbouring Thane. The Brabourne Stadium in South Mumbai is owned by Cricket Club of India. The Chennai and Abu Dhabi (Dubs) are expected to be similar in many ways and teams can expect a whirlwind of spin during the tournament. Records Dhoni can smash in IPL 13 As Dhoni returns to the playing field, with the wicketkeeper's gloves, there are a few records which he could break in the tournament. The CSK captain currently tops the charts for most dismissals in the IPL. He can go on a step further. Dhoni, with 133 dismissals to his name, needs 17 more to reach the landmark of 150 dismissals. The 39-year-old can look at breaking the record for the most dismissals in a single season. With 26 dismissals in 16 matches during IPL 12, the record is currently held by Delhi Capitals' Rishabh Pant. Going by news about Dhoni's form with the bat, it is very surprising that he is a wicket taker. This should be a cakewalk for the three-time IPL champion.

Trump says Canada wants to reopen the border. But do we, really?

U.S. President Donald Trump's comments on Friday suggesting Canada is keen to reopen the border with his country stand in direct contrast to statements made by Canadian officials supporting the continued border restrictions.

"We're looking at the border with Canada. Canada would like it open, and, you know, we want to get back to normal business," Trump said at the White House, adding that "we're going to be opening the borders pretty soon" to take advantage of the renegotiated NAFTA.

"We're working with Canada. We want to pick a good date, having to do with the pandemic. And I happen to think we're rounding the turn," Trump said.

Asked by CBC News to respond, a spokesperson for the Prime Minister's Office pointed to a tweet from Public Safety Minister Bill Blair earlier in the day, saying the border will remain closed to non-essential travel until at least Oct. 21.

"We will continue to base our decisions on the best public health advice available to keep Canadians

Blair wrote.

When CBC first reported on the extension of restrictions into October they were due to expire this week, one source said. Canadians should prepare for them to last even longer.

The official spokesperson, however, of saying they would remain until Christmas, but that the project was open to review.

These senior sources with direct knowledge of the situation, speaking to CBC News on condition they not be named, have reportedly expressed concern over recent months and again on Friday - how planned they are with the current restrictions.

One source said both Canada and the U.S. see them as effective and as strong, co-operative measures necessary to respond to the pandemic.

Keeping Canadians safe. Kiran Hillman, Canada's ambassador to the U.S., said last week that she speaks with U.S. officials about the border on a weekly basis and there is a general agreement the current situation is working well.

"The measures are doing what they were designed to do... to allow the flow of commercial goods and essential services while controlling the spread of the virus and reduce the risk to our citizens on both sides," Hillman said.

"When push comes to shove, our No. 1 goal is going to be to keep Canadians safe."

Blair told reporters Wednesday that he's looking to make adjustments to allow more travel on humanitarian grounds, but that any changes will be limited and that, broadly, he wants to keep them in place.

90% support. With COVID-19 case loads still high in many U.S. states, public opinion surveys have also suggested there's little appetite in Canada for change.

A new poll by Research Co. found earlier this month that out of 1,000 Canadians surveyed online at the end of August, 90 per cent agreed with the current restrictions.

The world's longest international border has been closed to non-essential travel for months, such as truck drivers and health-care professionals - an still able to cross by land. Canadians are also still able to fly to U.S. destinations.

Ottawa has also moved to curb the movement of Americans through Canada on their way to Alaska. U.S. travellers destined for the northern state have been limited to five crossings in Western Canada and they must commit to taking a direct route.

In June, a man travelling from Alaska to the continental United States was charged with violating Canada's Quarantine Act. He was accused of twice failing to follow COVID-19 public safety rules while in Alaska. If he's found to have violated a quarantine order, he could be fined up to $750,000 or sentenced to six months in jail.

That would reduce the number of voters inside polling location at any one time and increase the availability of potential voting places such as schools, which otherwise might be full of students.

The early call means that Elections Canada can only make changes within existing elections law. That means Elections Canada can maintain physical distancing in polling locations, require that all workers wear masks and supply voters with single-use pens/pencils. (Voters also can request special ballots in the mail but that option was available to them before the pandemic hit.)

Those changes might mean longer lines on voting day and a delay in reporting the results (the people counting the ballots need to be physically distanced, too) but otherwise, the by-elections should unfold as they normally would.

This isn't a normal situation, of course. The recent experience of New Brunswick - the first jurisdiction in Canada to hold an election during the pandemic - can act as a guide. But New Brunswick's pandemic experience has been very different from that of Toronto. Since March, New Brunswick has reported 194 cases of COVID-19. Toronto reported 215 new cases on Thursday and Friday alone.

Alberta could lead Canada in wind and solar power by 2025, expert says

A wind farm generates electricity near holes of hay in the foothills of Alberta in this file photo. Experts anticipate that renewable energy development in the province will continue growing. (Todd Kozlowski)

Growth in Alberta's renewable energy sector should continue its upward trend, experts say, with one forecast anticipating a surge of projects that could have the province poised to be the Canadian leader in utility-scale wind and solar capacity as early as 2025.

Rystad Energy tracks utility-scale wind and solar assets with at least one MWh (megawatt alternating current) in capacity. It forecasts that 85 per cent of the combined utility-scale wind and solar capacity built in Canada over the next five years will be in Alberta. That wouldn't include smaller renewable development such as residential rooftop solar.

With the forecast growth, Rystad analyst Felix Yan expects Alberta will have the largest combined total of utility-scale wind and solar capacity in the country by the middle of the decade, overtaking Ontario.

"Alberta is sort of playing catch up," Yan said in an interview from New York.

"We have seen a lot of capacity built out over the past two, three, four years in places like Ontario, in B.C. and Quebec."

According to the data that Rystad tracks, Alberta's current renewable capacity includes 0.1 gigawatt (GW) of solar and 1.8 GW of wind. By 2025, it expects that to grow to 1.8 GW of solar and 6.1 GW of wind.

Rystad forecasts Ontario will have about 1.8 GW solar and 5.8 GW wind in 2025.

The said Alberta's commitment to stop burning coal to generate electricity by 2030 "opens the door" for wind and solar to play a larger role.

He also said the province's deregulated electricity market creates a favourable environment for solar and which makes the cost low.

He said Alberta's solar resources are second only to Saskatchewan.

Some Alberta projects. A number of multimillion-dollar wind and solar projects are planned for Alberta in the next few years.

Edmonton International Airport Alpin Sun announced this summer they are working on an agreement that will see the company develop Airport City Solar, a 254-hectare solar farm on the west side of the airport lands.

The massive Trivers Solar project in Vulcan County is also in the works.

"We're going to continue to add renewables in this province," said Shaffer, whose work focuses on electricity markets, climate policy and energy innovation.

"Whether or not we surpass Ontario in that time frame, I can't say definitively right now. But certainly it's going to grow. And it's simply a function that the cost of building renewables has just gotten so cheap."

Like Yan, he also sees the benefit of Alberta's competitive market structure for electricity.

Shaffer said Texas, a place with a long history in oil and gas, has become a growth center for renewables in the United States. He believes Alberta will also become a growth leader in renewable energy.

"That's not because of an intrinsic love for renewables," he said.

"It's simply that we have the best resource in terms of what we call capacity factor - so the frequency with which the wind blows here is high,

Police forced to break up massive gathering in Ontario parking lot

TORONTO - Officers who broke up a massive gathering in a Hamilton parking lot hours after the provincial government tried to clamp down on such events won't hesitate to lay charges in the case, police warned Sunday as they announced an investigation was underway.

Hamilton Police Sgt. Will Mason said the hundreds of people that congregated in the Ancaster area on Saturday were blatantly disregarding new provincial rules meant to contain the spread of COVID-19.

Premier Doug Ford, spurred on by rising case numbers, lowered limits for both indoor and outdoor social gatherings province-wide on Friday. Recently passed legislation also sets steep fines for those contravening the limits, with event organizers facing a minimum penalty of $16,000 and attendees potentially on the hook for at least $750.

Mason said investigators would make use of the new law if they're able to identify the organizers of Saturday's mass gathering.

"We absolutely think the actions last night, in light of the concern with COVID-19, are abhorrent," Mason said at a Sunday afternoon news conference. "The participants should be ashamed of themselves, and I we can identify them and we are able to lay charges down the road, we will certainly be doing that."

Police said investigators received a tip from a neighbouring fence on Saturday afternoon suggesting a group of people on-hand when they arrived, and the crowd grew steadily over the hour until it completely filled the parking lots of a local music theatre and book store, as well as spilling over onto other nearby properties.

Two byelections will test Liberal support - and Canada's preparations for a pandemic election

Every byelection serves as a public test of a government's popularity. When voters go to the polls in two federal byelections next month, however, they'll also be testing something else - how prepared Canada's elections system is to hold a nationwide vote in the middle of a global pandemic.

On Friday, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau announced that byelections will be held in the ridings of Toronto Centre and York Centre on Oct. 26. The winners will fill the vacancies left in the House of Commons in August when Liberal MP Michael Levitt and former finance minister Bill Morneau resigned.

Earlier in the week, Trudeau said that Canada's democratic institutions are strong enough to handle the COVID-19 emergency and pushed back against the suggestion that holding an election mid-pandemic would be reckless.

He might have been thinking primarily of these two byelections.

The law requires that byelections be called within six months of a seat becoming vacant, with the campaign lasting between 36 and 56 days. That means these votes had to be called by the end of February and held by early April.

While case numbers have been increasing in Ontario - particularly in Toronto, where the two vacant ridings are located - there is no telling how the situation could change over the next six months. Health experts have long warned that the number of new cases of COVID-19 was likely to rise over the fall and winter - possibly beyond the numbers the country was seeing in the spring.

So it's not an ideal time to be holding byelections - but it might be far safer to hold them now than to wait and hope that the situation improves in the near term.

Voting experience to be different. Holding off on calling the byelections might have given the government more time, however - time to push through some of the legislative changes Elections Canada has said it is considering recommending to prepare for a pandemic general election.

One of those proposed changes would extend election "day" to cover an entire weekend, rather than limiting voting to Monday.
