Meng Wanzhou back in court to argue U.S. misled Canada in extradition case

Meng Wanzhou will appear in B.C. Supreme Court early Monday as her lawyers launch an attack on the underlying record of the U.S. case for extradition of the Huawei executive.

According to documents filed ahead of this week's hearing, the defence team will argue that, in their attempts to convince a Canadian judge to order Meng to New York, American officials omitted facts that undermine charges of fraud and conspiracy against her client.

Meng's lawyers hope to convince the judge overseeing the extradition proceedings that the allegations against U.S. officials not only have an "air of reality" about them - but that if proven, the abuse of process might warrant tossing the high-profile case.

"The [United States'] material misstatements and omissions of the conflicts disintegrated the case against her," the defence team said in an application filed during the summer.

"Only a stay will vindicate the principles of fundamental justice," accused of lying.

The arguments about the record of the case are one of three lines of attack the defence team is taking to try to scuttle extradition proceedings against Meng, Huawei's chief financial officer.

Hearings have been set for February 2021 on the other two alleged abuses of process, which centre on publication of the case and alleged violations of her rights at the time of arrest.

The purpose of this week's proceedings is for Associate Chief Justice Heather Holmes to decide if concerns about the evidence reach the once-threshold for reconsideration.

Meng was arrested at Vancouver's airport on Dec. 1, 2018 on what was supposed to be a stopover from Hong Kong to Mexico City.

The 48-year-old is accused of lying to an HSBC executive in August 2013 about Huawei's control of SkyCom, a company alleged to have violated U.S. economic sanctions against Iran.

Prosecutors claim Meng gave a PowerPoint in which she assured the banker that Huawei was not in control of SkyCom, when in fact, the company would prove to be a subsidiary.

The Crown claims HSBC relied on Meng's lies in order to decide to keep financing Huawei - which put the bank at risk of loss and prosecution for violating the same sanctions against Iran.

"Not supported by past U.S. government practice"

In a key victory for the prosecution in May, Holmes found that Meng's alleged actions - had they occurred in Canada - would be considered a crime.

But Meng lawyers claim that in presenting the case to Canada, U.S. prosecutors left out key lies from the PowerPoint which show that she didn't mislead HSBC about either SkyCom's operations in Iran or Huawei's relationship with SkyCom.

They claim senior executives at HSBC knew about Huawei's true relationship with SkyCom, not just "junior" employees, as described in the record of offences.

They say prosecutors failed to mention that HSBC didn't have to use the American banking system to clear financial transactions related to the company - meaning no sanctions would be violated.

The defence team wants to enter an affidavit from John Bellinger, a former counsel to the George W. Bush White House, who claims the U.S. has never imposed civil or criminal penalties on a bank for breaking sanctions after being misled by a customer.

"Any assertion that Ms. Meng's alleged misrepresentations would have put the bank in legal jeopardy for sanctions violations is not supported by past U.S. government practice."

"Actual trial of evidence is not in question"

In court documents, Meng's lawyers point to a 2003 case in which a B.C. Supreme Court judge stayed proceedings when the United Kingdom sought a Victoria man for extradition in relation to an alleged conspiracy involving the sale of rare coins.

In that case, the Royal Society determined that one of the chief witnesses had absconded, another had died, and prosecutors didn't actually know if another was available.

In granting a stay, the judge said it would be "unfair" to rely on the record of the case.

Canada failed to protect elderly in 1st wave of COVID-19 - will the same mistakes be made again?

Months later, no concrete action has yet been taken, and the second wave of COVID-19 infections is well underway in previously hard-hit provinces, such as Ontario, B.C. and Quebec.

On Friday, Trudeau conceded during a press conference that problems in long-term care facilities "existed long before COVID-19."

"The systems that we had were inadequate all across the country," he said. "They were not up to the task of protecting our most vulnerable."

But experts question why the process of fixing those systemic issues has only now just begun.

"The writing is on the wall that this health care system is in a state of crisis," said Dr. Andrew Boozary, associate director of health and social policy for the Toronto's University Health Network.

"If we were going to be judged by how we protected our most susceptible and people who are extremely vulnerable - we failed them."

Dozens of COVID-19 outbreaks have recently been reported in nursing homes in Ontario, B.C., Alberta and Quebec as the second wave arrives in much of Canada.

In his address to the nation Wednesday night, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said the situation experienced by "too many elders" in long-term care homes was "unacceptable."

"That has to change and it will change," he said. "We will be working with the provinces and territories to set new national standards for long-term care."

But Canada's systemic failures in long-term care are nothing new, and neither are the calls for action.

Long-term care deficiencies a long-standing issue

A July report from the Royal Society of Canada, an association that includes some of Canada's top scientists and scholars, described COVID-19 as "a shock wave that cracked wide all the fissures in our nursing home systems." It called on the federal government to act "immediately" on creating national standards of care.

Canada's death toll could hit 16,000 by the end of 2020, new modelling warns

TORONTO — Canada could see as many as 16,000 COVID-19 deaths by the end of the year. If current public safety measures do change, according to new modelling from the United States that has provided accurate assessments of the American death toll.

But a Canadian pandemic modelling expert says that, while anything is possible, the American model may not be capturing the whole picture in Canada.

The model from the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation (IHME) at the University of Washington suggests Canada could see 16,214 deaths by Jan. 1 based on the current situation. If public safety measures are loosened, such as physical distancing, the death toll could be even higher, hitting approximately 16,743 lives.

Universal masking in public spaces could curb those numbers and save thousands of lives, the model suggests, pointing to countries like Singapore that have successfully put in place masking protocols that are 95 per cent effective. Singapore has reported 27 deaths since the start of the pandemic.

If Canada were to successfully implement similar measures, the modelling predicts a death toll of 12,053.

So far Canada has reported 9,256 deaths from COVID-19 and more than 150,000 cases. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau warned earlier this week that the country is at the beginning of a second wave of infections as he urged Canadians to take public health guidelines seriously.

Quebec is leading the country with new cases of COVID-19. On Saturday, the province reported another 698 cases, the highest daily infection numbers since May.

Dierksen Alzema, an associate professor at the University of Toronto who specializes in mathematical models for pandemic prediction, said the IHME model is "simplistic" and does not account for regional differences across the country.

While a second wave of COVID-19 infections has started, Alzema points out that deaths are not in a second wave. COVID-19 deaths in Canada peaked in April and May, when more

More than 100 people died in connection with the virus daily. Those numbers have remained much lower in recent months, with five deaths reported on Friday.

"The fact that deaths are not tracking with infections as they did in the first wave indicates that vulnerable individuals are seeking more protections to protect themselves now, and it is reasonable to assume those protections will continue as the second wave gets going. This model does not account for the fact that some people are behaving differently from others, and thus, the projected deaths are likely overstated," Alzema told CTV News on Saturday evening.

The latest modelling by the Public Health Agency of Canada does not offer predictions at the end of the year, but suggests that, based on current rates, the death toll could steadily rise to 9,300 lives lost by Oct. 2.

The IHME modelling has proven to be accurate. Earlier this year, the model predicted that the U.S. would hit 200,000 deaths in September, a grim milestone that happened earlier this week. Now, the model predicts the U.S. death toll will nearly double by the end of the year, reaching 371,509 by Jan. 1.

The IHME model also predicts daily infections - a number that includes people who aren't tested for COVID-19 - could hit more than 19,000 by the end of the year.

Alzema said it's important to remember that, even if a person doesn't die from COVID-19, the consequences of getting sick can be serious.

"There are numerous examples of otherwise healthy individuals with severe reactions to COVID taking several weeks and even months to recover, and there are indications that there could be long-term health consequences," she said.

"We should view these projections of exponential infection increase with great concern, and we as individuals should take every reasonable precaution to stem this increase before it is too far out of control. Wearing masks is easy and effective, and we should do it."

Infections may be on the upswing, but Canada's Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Theresa Tam said Saturday that limiting general contacts as much as possible can help curb again flatten the curve. She encouraged Canadians to take time this weekend to chat with loved ones about how to keep their bubbles safe.

"Even if people attending an event are part of your extended family, as has been the case with some of these private gathering outbreaks, it doesn't mean they are not infected, even if no one appears to be unwell," Tam said in a statement.

"Despite the very real concern of a large resurgence in areas where the virus is escalating, there is still reason to be optimistic that we can get things back to the slow burn."

IRCC speeding up processing for spousal applications

Ottawa—Today, the Honourable Marco E. L. Mendicino, Minister of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship, is announcing action to speed up spousal application processing and help families build their lives together in Canada.

Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) has increased the number of decision makers on spousal applications in Canada by 66%, to process spousal applications more quickly and reduce couples' wait times.

IRCC is leveraging new technology in a pilot to digitize paper applications so they can be processed more efficiently by IRCC employees working remotely and at various work sites. In addition to implementing facilitative biometrics measures, IRCC will be piloting, in the upcoming weeks, technology to conduct interviews with applicants remotely, in adherence with public health protocols.

With these initiatives, IRCC aims to accelerate, prioritize and finalize approximately 6,000 spousal applications each month from October until December 2020. Combined with processing to date, this will lead to about 49,000 decisions by the end of this year.

COVID-19 has created uncertainty for Canadians who are sponsoring spouses for permanent residence. We will continue to search for innovative and compassionate ways to reunite families, while following the advice of our public health experts to protect the health and safety of Canadians.

Ontario's 2nd wave of COVID-19 forecast to peak in October

Fresh projections suggest that Ontario's second wave of COVID-19 will peak in mid- to late October and will likely see enough patients to inundate care that hospitals will need to scale back non-emergency services.

The forecasts come from the COVID-19 Modelling Collaborative, a joint effort of scientists and physicians from the University of Toronto, University Health Network and Sunnybrook Hospital.

Based on how quickly Ontario's infection rate has been rising in recent weeks, the model projects the province is on track to exceed 1,000 new cases per day by the middle of October, unless stricter public health measures slow the non-emergency growth.

The average number of new cases reported daily in Ontario is currently running four times higher than what it was at the end of August. Premier Doug Ford's government has since struck limits on the size of private gatherings, reduced opening hours for bars and ordered strict hygiene.

On Monday, Ontario reported an additional 700 cases of COVID-19, the most on a single day since the outbreak began in late January. The figure surpassed the previous high of 640 from April 24.

On Sunday, Ontario's Ministry of Health reported 112 patients in hospital with a confirmed case of COVID-19, nearly triple the number of two weeks ago. The research team says the impact of the second wave on Ontario's hospitals will depend on the demographic mix of who gets infected in the coming weeks.

The dotted line shows the current prediction for the start of Ontario's second wave of COVID-19, based on work by a team of researchers from the University of Toronto, the University Health Network and Sunnybrook Hospital. The solid line shows how the case numbers will evolve if the second wave follows the patterns seen in Michigan this summer (light grey), in the Australian state of Victoria (dark grey), or Italy in the pandemic's first wave (black). COVID-19 risk in Canada is shown in red.

"We are at this critical moment right now where we see case numbers increase, and we don't quite know yet where it's going," said Bruce Vanderkoope, a scientist at the University Health Network and Canada Research Chair in surveillance of infectious diseases. "Right now, we have predominantly younger, healthy people [contracting COVID-19 in Ontario]," Vanderkoope said in an interview with CBC News. "But what we've seen in other jurisdictions is that it really spills over into other population groups."

The team of researchers has run five scenarios for how Ontario's second wave could play out.

The best-case scenario would mimic Ontario's first wave in March and April, when case numbers increased rapidly but were then curbed by lockdown.

Two moderate scenarios would resemble how a second wave hit jurisdictions comparable to Ontario: the Australian state of Victoria (home to Melbourne, a city of five million), and the U.S. state of Michigan.

None of those three scenarios shows COVID-19 patients filling Ontario's hospital wards or ICUs beyond their capacity. That happens only in the modelled "worst-case scenario" a second wave as severe as the first wave that hit Italy when the pandemic began.

However, in all but the best-case scenario, the researchers foresee ICU demand that exceeds the capacity and that being able to detect new cases is certainly not without economic consequences. And while the move was seen as a way to stop the coronavirus from spreading into Canada from the U.S., if and when America gets its situation under control, experts warn to find a way to get people moving back and forth again - especially given this virus will be with us for some time.

SFU professor Kelly Lee said border restrictions are only part of the equation required for patients undergoing scheduled surgeries.

"The really high-risk cancer surgeries, for instance, won't be able to go ahead if the ICUs are overwhelmed with people who are showing up in the emergency department dying of COVID-19 associated pneumonia and respiratory failure," said Dr. Khalil Bhanji, a critical care physician at the University Health Network and part of the modelling consortium.

The researchers stress that their modelling scenarios are simply forecasts. They use data on the proportion of people who have ended up in hospital and ICUs while positive for the coronavirus, and project those onto Canadian cases in future waves.

The shifting demographics of who's getting infected with COVID-19 as the second wave builds makes it challenging for the researchers to forecast just how many people will seek hospital treatment.

"The second wave in Spain and France started in the younger population, but it is spreading to the elderly and the people who are more at risk of ending up in the intensive care unit or in the hospital," said Bhanji in an interview with CBC News.

"It is just a matter of time until this virus, if it's affecting the young population, spreads into the elderly population," he said. "We're already starting to see what is happening in Ontario."

different countries are requiring different things and we're watching them really closely to see what happens to their transmission rates and see if they do actually work," he said.

Beyond the U.S.-Canada border, Lee suggested exploring so-called travel bubbles, creating travel restrictions with countries where the pandemic is under control.

The border closure was first put in place in March, when cases of COVID-19 spiked across the continent. It's been extended every month since, and is now set to expire on Oct. 21.

The Public Health Agency of Canada said it continues to assess travel risks for Canadians, and will adjust and adapt its border measures based on science and evidence.

The border closure was first put in place in March, when cases of COVID-19 spiked across the continent. It's been extended every month since, and is now set to expire on Oct. 21.

On Sept. 18, days before the agreement was set to expire, Minister of Public Safety Bill Blair said Canada would "continue to base our decisions on the best public health advice available to keep Canadians safe."

The number of cases of COVID-19 continues to rise in the U.S. at a rate far greater than on this side of the border, despite Canada being in the midst of a second wave of the coronavirus.

Some experts suggest Canada-U.S. border can reopen safely amid COVID-19 pandemic

YANCOUVER (NEWS 1130) - There are now policies a government can take to allow the border to open safely amid the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. Some experts say it's possible to reopen the border, but that will mean other measures are required.

The closure to all but essential travel is certainly not without economic consequences. And while the move was seen as a way to stop the coronavirus from spreading into Canada from the U.S., if and when America gets its situation under control, experts warn to find a way to get people moving back and forth again - especially given this virus will be with us for some time.

Real Imitates Reel! Shradha Kapoor Faces NCB Heat, While Shakti Kapoor Cast As Narco Officer In Sushant Film

While Shradha Kapoor was recently grilled by NCB as part of her probe into the Bollywood-drug nexus case, her sister Shakti Kapoor has been cast as a narcotics officer in an upcoming film inspired by the life of late actor Sushant Singh Rajput.

Shradha Kapoor was grilled by the Narcotics Control Bureau (NCB) as part of their crackdown against the Bollywood-drug nexus in connection with the Sushant Singh Rajput death case. A top NCB source told IANS that the agency got suspicious after it came to the fore in one of the alleged chats of Neha Saha, the talent manager of Sushant who was discussing drugs with the late actor's girlfriend Rhea Chakraverty. Meanwhile, another alleged chat is believed to be between Shradha Kapoor and Saha.

The alleged chat of Kapoor with Saha was the reason behind the Narcotics Control Bureau (NCB) to narrow their net on drug-related cases that emerged out during the probe of actor Sushant Singh Rajput's death case.

In the chat, Saha and Shradha can be seen discussing CBD oil.

Saha is here chat to Shradha saying, "Call me once you are done. Will come down and get you?"

She then again sends another message to Shradha saying, "Hello I am sending CBD oil with Jassi today :)"

To which, Shradha replied, "Hey! Thank you."

Shradha sends smiles by Saha. Shradha again writes to Saha and says, "Listen, I still want to meet Saha."

Ironically, Shradha's sister Shakti Kapoor has been cast as a narco officer in an upcoming film inspired by the life of the late actor. Nyaay: The

No chance of India-Pakistan bilateral series with Modi in power, says Afridi

KARACHI: Former Pakistan skipper Shahid Afridi, who is known to give reckless statements, has come up with another one. This time on India-Pakistan relations. The all-rounder said that bilateral series between India and Pakistan won't be possible until Narendra Modi government is in power. "The government of Pakistan is always ready but with the present regime [in India] there are no such chances of [resuming] cricket relations, of [Pakistan-India] series. With Modi in power, I don't see it's going to happen," Afridi was quoted as saying by Arab News. He further said that Pakistani players are missing out big time by not being able to participate in the IPL. "I know that IPL is a very big brand in the world of cricket and it is an excellent opportunity for, whether it's Babar Azam or many other Pakistani players to go there to play under pressure and give some dressing rooms. So in my opinion Pakistani players are missing a big opportunity," Afridi added. "No doubt, the way I have enjoyed cricket in India, I would always appreciate the love and respect that I have gotten from the people of India. And now when I speak on social media, I get many messages from India and I reply to many people. I believe that my overall experience of India has been excellent," Afridi said on the love he got in India. The IPL got underway on September 19 after a massive delay caused due to the coronavirus outbreak.

Hockey India appoint two temporary coaches to ease Graham Reid's workload

Hit by the sudden departure of its key support staff members, the Indian hockey team has roped in two Dutch coaches to temporarily plug the gap until full-time replacements are appointed.

In the last one month, Hockey India's high-performance director David John, analytical coach Chris Ciriello, and physio David Macdonald all quit citing personal reasons. The exits have left chief coach Graham Reid without much support to oversee training at the ongoing national camp in Bangalore.

To ease Reid's burden, Hockey India has roped in the services of Dutchmen Bram Lomans and Doris van de Pol for a period of 16 weeks, during which they will remotely coach the players.

Two-time Olympic gold medalist and World Cup winner Lomans, who has worked with Reid when the Australian was the coach of Amsterdam hockey club, will coach the drag-flickers. He will take over the responsibility from Ciriello, who was also responsible to monitor the penalty corner specialists apart from being the analytical coach. Van de Pol, meanwhile, will be the go-kipping coach. He had a short seven-day stint with the Indian goalkeepers last year.

Lomans and Van de Pol are expected to provide a weekly schedule to Reid, who will exercise his plans and film their training on the ground.

Na Bhai Na! Yuvraj Singh's Hilarious Post When Rahul Tewatia Almost Hit 6 Sixes In An Over

Rajasthan Royals' Rahul Tewatia was the talk of the town during their IPL 2020 match against Kings XI Punjab on September 27. During the initial stages of his innings, Tewatia straggled slightly and could not even rotate the strike easily. However, during the latter stages of the game, in the 18th over, Rahul Tewatia swirled gears all of a sudden and KXIP pacer Sheldon Cottrell was at the receiving end.

During the 18th over, RR overtook their kinsmen as Tewatia went berserk on Sheldon Cottrell as he hit 6 sixes in the latter's over. Tewatia swirled 4 sixes which was followed by a dot ball before he slammed another six to finish the over. This charge by Rahul Tewatia helped Rajasthan Royals to bring down their target of 11 from 18 balls to 21 off the last 2 overs.

In the meanwhile, former all-rounder Yuvraj Singh was all praise for Rahul Tewatia on Twitter but he also had his heart in his mouth as he almost saw his record being equaled. Yuvraj went to share a funny post thanking Tewatia for missing 6 sixes in the over. Yuvraj took to Twitter and wrote, "Mr @rahultewatia what a thank for missing one ball! What a game congratulations to rr for a spectacular win!! @RRR-KXIP @mnaamcricket great knock @rahulSanyal @sanyon brilliant!"

Mayank Agarwal's century and his epic 193-run opening stand with captain KL Rahul helped KXIP score 223.2. Mayank scored 106 from 50 balls, his innings punctuated by as many seven sixes and 10 fours. Rahul, on the other hand, scored 69 off 54, enabling seven fifts and one six.

RR in reply ended the match on 224.6 with three balls to spare. Sanyal and captain Steve Smith, however, ensured that their side reach 100 before the 10th over. Smith soon hit on 50 off 27 deliveries off the last ball of the sixth over after which Tewatia was promoted ahead of Rohit Uthappa.

Tewatia went on to score 53 runs in his quickfire batting and along with 224.6 with three balls to spare, Sanyal (85 runs of 42 balls) led to Rajasthan Royals breaking the record for the highest successful run-chase in the history of the Indian Premier League (IPL).

With this win, Rajasthan Royals move up to second place behind Delhi Capitals in the IPL 2020 points table with 4 points at a Net Run Rate of +0.615. Kings XI Punjab are right behind in third place with 2 points and an impressive NRR of +1.498.

During the 18th over, RR overtook their kinsmen as Tewatia went berserk on Sheldon Cottrell as he hit 6 sixes in the latter's over. Tewatia swirled 4 sixes which was followed by a dot ball before he slammed another six to finish the over. This charge by Rahul Tewatia helped Rajasthan Royals to bring down their target of 11 from 18 balls to 21 off the last 2 overs.

Trump to approve $22B railway between Alaska and Alberta

U.S. President Donald Trump says he will grant approval to a $22-billion freight rail project connecting Alaska and Alberta.

The president tweeted Friday that based on the recommendations of Alaska Senator Dan Sullivan and Congresswoman Dee Young, he will be issuing a presidential permit approving the A2A Rail project.

The project would build a new rail line from Fort McMurray, Alta., through the Northwest Territories and Yukon to the Delta Junction in Alaska, where it will connect with existing rail and continue on to ports near Anchorage.

The 2,570-kilometre railway could move cargo like oil, potash and ore, consumer goods, or even passengers.

Christie Myatt, a spokesperson for Alberta Premier Jason Kenney, said in an emailed statement that the project welcomed the approval.

"The Government of Alberta is glad to see the approval of the A2A rail project in the United States," she said.

"We support the development of trade corridors that can unlock new markets for Alberta's products." Kent Fellow, an economist at the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy, said while oil is likely the main driver for the project, it's not the only advantage to building a rail line north.

"You can diversify a little bit... you don't just have to haul crude oil. You can hold a lot of other commodities, too, as long as there's a

How Canadians reacted when Pierre Trudeau died

Former PM passed away Sept. 26, 2000 at the age of 90

CBC Television had been broadcasting a footage from a stadium at the Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, on Sept. 28, 2000 when a news bulletin interrupted it.

Pierre Elliott Trudeau, prime minister of Canada from 1968 to 1984 (with a brief respite as opposition leader), was dead at 90.

An obituary with what he called "fascinating images" from political correspondent Jason Moscovitz had just aired when anchor Peter Mansbridge came back to break the news a second time for those just tuning in.

"Justin and Sasha Trudeau ought to inform Canadians that their father, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, passed away shortly after 3 p.m. this afternoon," Mansbridge read from the newsroom.

Mansbridge said it was news that Canadians had been "dreading" for previous few weeks since it became clear that Trudeau's illness was "a serious one."

"The night's The National included a report from a place where Trudeau had 'cast a long shadow' on Canada and its politicians, and where his influence was still felt: Parliament."

In the House of Commons that day, MPs observed a moment of silence for Trudeau, including one who had worked with him.

"He was a giant [in] his achievements," said Deputy Prime Minister Herb Gray. "I think of his Charter of Rights and Freedoms and his Constitution. That really won't be equalled in our time for a long time market for it. So market access is big, not just for crude oil."

Fellows said as well as carrying Alberta or Yukon goods to international markets, the line could be used for exports, too.

"That's the whole point of trade. It's two-way street."

The next steps will include going through environmental impact assessments, and obtaining the correct regulatory approvals in both the U.S. and Canada.

In July, the company completed an engineering firm to begin surveying land along the Alberta segment of the proposed route. It said it planned to begin field activities like land clearing, fencing and access road preparation in the province in the next three to six months.

"The new rail line will create new economic development opportunities for a wide range of businesses, communities and Indigenous communities in Canada and Alaska," A2A founder Stan McCoshen said in an emailed statement.

CIBC News has reached out to the company for comment on the press release.

A2A Rail has said that if built, the project will create more than 18,000 jobs for Canadian workers and bring in $40 billion to the country's GDP through 2040.

"He was a passive man. He was a very personable man." Even Jon Clark, who by then was once again at the helm of the Progressive Conservatives and had been defeated by Trudeau 20 years earlier, had good things to say about him.

"He was a giant of a man," he told reporter Susan Bonner. "[He] set a standard by which others will follow him will be judged for a long time."

In Montreal, where Trudeau made his home after retiring as Prime Minister, reporter Lyne Robson encountered a steady stream of mourners turning up outside his house.

"It's a tremendous loss for Canadians," said Bonner. "He was just a great man," said Stephen Straton, who identified himself as Trudeau's friend and, apparently overcome with grief, wept at the news.

"He was good for Canada, but not for Quebec," said a third, in French. Senator Jacques Hébert, who Robson said had been "best friends" with Trudeau for "more than 50 years," had seen Trudeau in the weeks leading up to his death.

"He was already... really very, very thin, and could hardly talk," he said. "I felt that he at the end of his life."

CERB recipients left in limbo 'sick and tired of not knowing' what comes next

OTTAWA -- In mid-March, Christine Ilett's manager broke some bad news to her: she was losing her job in live theatre as a result of the pandemic.

The 47-year-old went home to her basement apartment north of Toronto, walked down the stairs, sat down and took off her shoes. She glanced up the staircase and thought, "I don't know when I'm leaving here."

"And for me, that was absolutely devastating because I love my job. I love working in theatre. And it just broke my heart."

As she has searched unsuccessfully for work, and with no sign of theatre reopening in the next few months or longer, she relied on the $500-a-week Canada Emergency Response Benefit.

Now, she, like millions of others, will see the payments as the CERB winds down starting this weekend.

In its place is employment insurance, which the government says the majority of people will go on, and a new suite of benefits that will exist unless approved by Parliament.

Ilett, isn't sure if she'll be automatically transferred to EI, or have to apply anew, or have to wait for the new benefits. She's spent the weekend figuring out what to do.

All she is sure of is that she won't have any income on Monday.

THE COST OF BENEFITS As of a week ago, the CERB had paid out $79.3 billion to 8.8 million people, or roughly two in every five members of the nearly 20.2 million-strong labour force in August.

Benefits were paid up front, which won't be the case for Ilett and others in the first wave of those being transferred to the new system. The government says the first payment will come the week of Oct. 11. About 80 per cent are expected to receive payments by Oct. 14; a further 10 per cent within the first two weeks.

The $500-a-week floor on benefits in EI, or $300 per week floor for new parents using the extended-leave option, will be taxable. Jobless benefits through this EI program will be available for at least 26 weeks, and claimants will be allowed to earn more than they did under the CERB, up to $38,000 annually, before being completely cut off.

Employers will also be allowed to use "supplemental unemployment benefits" to top up EI payments.

The threshold to qualify for EI has been reduced to 120 hours of insurable work for those coming back into the system that has been nearly dormant since March.

The government says 2.8 million people will qualify for EI as of Monday. But many, like Ilett, may not do so automatically.

APPLYING A NEW Ilett remembered calling a number to sign up for the CERB. She didn't remember if it was Service Canada or the Canada Revenue Agency that she spoke with.

Anyone who applied for and received the CERB through Service Canada and is eligible for EI is supposed to be automatically transitioned over to employment insurance.

Anyone who applied and received the CERB through the CRA would need to apply anew for EI, if they qualify. Others who will have to apply to Service Canada are those with temporary 900-series social insurance numbers and self-employed workers who receive benefits through Service Canada.

Ilett planned to make calls and search online for answers this weekend to figure out what she needs to do. On Friday, Service Canada was warning about long wait times on the phone, with more volumes expected next week.

"I'm sick and tired of not knowing," she said. "Now that we've got this thing and it's going to last for six months, that provides me with a little bit of relief, because at least I know for those six months, but I'm sick and tired of everything being done ad hoc."

NOT QUALIFYING YET Ilett's Liberal MP proposed the new suite of benefits in August, two days after Parliament was prorogued.

The Liberals introduced a bill Thursday in the House of Commons that includes the CERB replacement,
