Canada to get first Pfizer COVID-19 vaccine doses before end of December

OTTAWA — Canada's first vaccinations against COVID-19 could begin happening as early as next week, pending Health Canada approval.

Canada will be receiving an initial batch of up to 249,000 doses of Pfizer's COVID-19 vaccine before the end of December, with the first shipment expected next week, and could be put into prioritized people's arms very soon after.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is making the announcement on Parliament Hill, alongside Public Services and Procurement Minister Anita Anand, Deputy Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Howard Njoo, and Maj.-Gen. Dany Fortin.

"The first shipment of doses is tracking for delivery next week. Shipments will continue to arrive into 2021, with millions of doses on the way. This will move us forward on our whole timeline of vaccine rollout, and is a positive development in getting Canadians protected as soon as possible," said Trudeau.

Fortin said that within one or two days of the shipment arriving in Canada, vaccines could be ready to be administered.

Health Canada has yet approved the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine candidate for use in this country, though senior officials have signalled that the independent agency is close to completing its efficacy and safety assessment and it could come this week. It began scrutinizing the data from Pfizer's clinical trials in early October.

The delivery of these doses will be contingent on the vaccine being deemed safe for use in Canada.

The initial doses will arrive in a series of shipments and altogether would be enough to fully vaccinate approximately 125,500 Canadians, as the vaccine requires two needles, weeks apart. It's possible the government could begin inoculating a larger number with the initial batch as they are anticipating a steady stream of additional doses in the weeks ahead.

They will be the first shipment of what was Canada's deal for up to 76 million doses from the pharmaceutical giant. Initially, the country is only anticipating receiving up to four million of those doses by March 2021.

The United Kingdom has approved the vaccine for use, and the United States Food and Drug Administration is set to give the pharmaceutical giant's vaccine the green light to roll out to Americans this week.

Health Canada's chief medical adviser Dr. Supriya Sharma said last Thursday that the review of Pfizer's vaccine candidate is progressing "very well" but the agency was awaiting some "key" information coming in the next few days, including quality assurance checks on the specific batches destined for Canada.

Meanwhile, Fortin — who is leading the National Operations Centre within the Public Health Agency of Canada that's focused on the logistics of the rollout — is leading a "dry run" of the Pfizer rollout, to ensure that there are no kinks in the ultra-cold storage delivery chain, including by the health professionals who will ultimately be handling the shots.

"Pfizer, the Public Health Agency and the provinces are working together to finalize preparations at the first 14 vaccination sites this week. I want to assure Canadians that any vaccine approved in Canada will be safe and effective," Trudeau said.

The dry run will be used to confirm the ordering, shipping and importation processes, and the initial dry run will use a shipping container with dry ice and a data logger to simulate a shipment of the vaccine, according to the government.

'We haven't seen anything like this before': pandemic boosts Canadian real estate

The Canadian real estate market is hot. And the heat is spreading far beyond big cities.

Phil Soper, president and CEO of Royal LePage, says the coronavirus pandemic is part of the reason.

"Real estate is one of those sectors that is actually seeing what I call a COVID-buylance, maybe the three P's of the pandemic: puppies, Peloton and property."

Soper says home prices are up about 10 per cent this year — double that of long-term averages.

A new report from the real estate company shows "cottage country," known as the recreational market, is especially hot.

To the end of September, year-over-year home prices in recreational property markets soared, driven by "Canadian's ability to work remotely."

The aggregate price of a single-family home in the recreational market rose 11.5 per cent to $453,846. The aggregate price of a waterfront property increased 13.5 per cent to $498,111.

Soper says there's been a significant shift.

"You see people saying, 'You know, my job can be done from anywhere, I'm making that decision. So potentially, I'm gonna relocate my family to where the cost of living is less, and the quality of life might be better,'" he says.

Soper says questions about a home's internet are now a priority, and that more than half of new buyers are looking at recreational properties as full-time homes.

In Falcon Lake, Man., near the Ontario border, Rishi Rambaran and his family decided cottage country made sense.

"We actually were looking to move our home in the city, but when this thing came up, we just were like, 'No, we will buy this instead.'"

Analysts say some of the increase is pent-up demand from the spring lockdown that pushed up real estate.

In Atlantic Canada, long considered the best real estate deal in the country, there are far more buyers than sellers.

Hot Market's Rishwan Malik on the pandemic effect on real estate — Nov 18, 2020

As a result, agent Kim Stewart says the cost is skyrocketing.

"We haven't seen anything like this before."

Stewart is representing a family from Vancouver, which got a surprise this week in purchasing a house in Dartmouth, N.S.

"I've been shocked at the price. It was almost $200,000 over the asking price."

Royal LePage doesn't see the trend letting up — it's forecasting demand and prices for recreational properties will keep increasing in the new year.

Canada adds over 6,200 new cases as provinces post new records, health restrictions

Canada added another 6,261 new cases of the novel coronavirus Sunday as health officials in P.E.I. announced sweeping health restrictions to contain the spread of a new outbreak.

A total of 414,833 people have been diagnosed with the virus in Canada after Sunday's update, of whom at least 326,800 have since recovered. The country's death toll now stands at 12,665 after 76 more deaths were reported on Sunday.

To date, over 15,368,700 tests have been administered in Canada, while a total of 2,883 people are currently hospitalized from the virus.

The lingering second wave has prompted more provinces to tighten rules in an effort to get it under control.

In P.E.I., officials announced a two-week "circuit breaker" in order to limit the spread of a small but growing outbreak in the Atlantic province.

According to the province's chief medical officer of health, Dr. Heather Morrison, the restrictions will go into effect on Monday and include the banning of all in-restaurant dining as well as the closure of bingo halls and libraries.

Coronavirus: Ontario continues to see record setting COVID-19 positive cases for second day

"If we do not... take a hard approach dealing with this situation head-on, it will take us much longer to recover and we will have more devastating impacts," Morrison said in a press conference Sunday.

With increased community case loads, hospitalizations and fatalities, the country's top doctor continued to ask Canadians to keep following public health advice, despite positive news about a potential vaccine.

"Although the road to widespread and lasting immunity to COVID-19 will be as sudden as or soon as we like, let's stay grounded and not lose our footing," said Canada's chief public health officer Dr. Theresa Tam in a statement Sunday.

"This is especially important as we plan for the upcoming holidays."

Tam said the spread of COVID-19 continues to occur in both high-risk populations including hospitals and long-term care homes across the country, as well as in indigenous and remote areas.

"This continued impact on high-risk individuals, settings and populations is deeply concerning, putting countless Canadians at risk of life-threatening illness, causing significant disruption to health services, and presenting ongoing challenges for areas not adequately equipped to manage complex medical emergencies," said Tam, who again noted the high susceptibility of those age 80 and older to the virus.

Ontario reported the highest number of new cases Sunday, with a record-breaking 1,924 more cases of COVID-19 in the province. Sunday's data, which pushes the total caseload to 127,309, marks the second day in a row that the province broke a record in daily reported infections.

Fifteen more deaths were also reported, with a total of 3,772 people succumbing to the virus in Ontario. Another 107,990 cases there have since recovered, however.

Quebec added another 1,691 cases of the virus, as well as 24 additional deaths. The province is considered the hardest hit by the virus in Canada. It now has its total cases and fatalities standing at 151,599.

Cases in Saskatchewan surpassed the 10,000 mark on Sunday after another 409 cases were announced by health officials. The province's death toll from COVID-19 also stands at 59 after four more deaths were reported.

Coronavirus: What's happening in Canada and around the world on Monday

Ontario has reported more than 1,500 COVID-19 cases two days in a row, with a new single-day high of 1,525 cases on Monday.

Toronto and Peel Region - which are both under the province's toughest public health restrictions - accounted for 1,113 of the 1,525 cases reported on Monday, according to information from Health Minister Christine Elliott.

The hard-hit province also reported 256 additional deaths on Monday, bringing the provincial death toll to 3,798.

Three more regions in Ontario are facing tougher public health restrictions as of Monday, but none are joining Toronto or Peel at the grey, or "lockdown," level.

Hospitalizations on Monday rose to 725, with 213 people in intensive care units, according to provincial data.

Health officials in Quebec on Monday reported 1,377 more cases of COVID-19 and 22 additional deaths.

Quebec, which has seen more COVID-19 cases and deaths than any other province, was dealing with even higher hospitalization numbers than Ontario.

The latest figures from the province reported 81 hospitalizations, with 105 people in intensive care.

What's happening across Canada

As of 12:50 p.m. ET on Monday, Canada's COVID-19 case count stood at 418,693, with 74,142 of those cases considered active. A CBC News tally of deaths based on provincial reports and regional health information and CBC's reporting stood at 12,713.

In Atlantic Canada, Prince Edward Island announced four additional cases of COVID-19 on Monday. Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Heather Morrison said the new cases are a woman in her 20s, two men in their 20s and a man in his 30s.

None of the new cases had recently travelled outside the province and all were "close contacts" of cases announced over the weekend, Morrison said.

"At this point, the source of the outbreak is not known and it is still under investigation," she said.

The province had 14 active cases, Morrison said, as she explained why the province wants more testing among 20-29-year-olds.

P.E.I. is in a two-week "strict isolation" COVID-19 "lockdown. Islanders are being urged to stay at home as much as possible and a wide range of businesses and services will either be closed or operating with restrictions. Public health officials in New Brunswick, meanwhile, reported two new cases of COVID-19 on Monday. Of the 536 cases reported in New Brunswick to date, 81 of them are considered active, according to a provincial health report.

Newfoundland and Labrador Premier Andrew Furey said Monday that the changes his province made to the so-called Atlantic travel bubble will remain in place for the next month.

"This means the 14-day self-isolation requirement for people entering the province from the neighbouring Atlantic provinces will continue throughout the holiday season," he said, noting there is an option to apply for an exemption.

Newfoundland had no new cases of COVID-19 to report on Monday, the province's top doctor said, leaving the total number of cases in the province at 351.

Health officials in Nova Scotia had not yet reported a Monday update.

To the west, health officials in Manitoba reported 163 new cases of COVID-19 and 14 additional deaths on Sunday, bringing the provincial death toll to 393.

Health officials in Saskatchewan, meanwhile, reported 153 new cases of COVID-19 on Sunday and four additional deaths.

In Alberta, which has been struggling with growing case numbers and hospitalizations, health officials on Monday reported 1,836 new cases of COVID-19 and 19 additional deaths. That comes after a new record on Saturday, when the province reported 1,879 new cases.

COVID-19 hospitalizations in Alberta also hit a new high on Sunday, with 601 people in the province's hospitals. Of those, 100 people were in intensive care, according to provincial reports.

In British Columbia, which doesn't publicly report COVID-19 figures on weekends, health officials are facing an outbreak at a Fraser Valley rink farm. According to the local health authority, eight people have tested positive at the site and testing of the animals is underway.

Across the North, Nunavut reported three new cases of COVID-19 on Monday, all often in Arviut. Located along the west coast of Hudson Bay, Arviut has been the worst hit by the pandemic since the territory recorded its first case in November.

Health officials in Yukon and the Northwest Territories had not yet provided an update on Monday.

What's happening around the world

As of around noon ET on Monday, there were more than 67.2 million cases of COVID-19 around the world, with more than 43.2 million of those considered recovered or resolved, according to a tracking tool maintained by Johns Hopkins University. The global death toll stood at more than 1.5 million.

In the Asia-Pacific region, South Korea's President Moon Jae-in called on Monday for expanded coronavirus testing and more thorough tracing as the country struggles to control its latest and largest wave of infections.

The Korea Disease Control and Prevention Agency reported 615 new coronavirus cases as of midnight Sunday, capping a month of triple-digit daily increases that have led to 8,311 confirmed patients in quarantine, the most ever.

The positive rate for the latest batch of tests was about 4.2 per cent, compared to the year's average of 1.2 per cent, according to the KDCA.

Moan ordered the government to mobilize every available resource to track infections, and to expand testing by deploying the military and more people from the public service, presidential office spokesman

Chang-Min told a briefing. In Europe, the Spanish government is pleading with people to voluntarily observe physical distancing rules and other measures over the Christmas holiday, with the health minister saying "we can't put a police officer in every house."

Health Minister Salvador Illa said Monday that measures announced last week to prevent the spread of COVID-19 over the seasonal holiday are "very dynamic."

A curfew will be in place between 1:30 a.m.-6 a.m. on Christmas Eve, Christmas Day and New Year's Eve, and family gatherings will be limited to 10 people.

"You don't play with COVID. Let's be careful," Illa told a news conference in Madrid.

Spain has reported over 46,000 coronavirus-related deaths in the pandemic.

Green's government, meanwhile, said it will maintain core lockdown measures through the Christmas holidays, acknowledging that restrictions that have been in place for a month have not reduced COVID-19 infections to the extent it had hoped for.

Chancellor Angela Merkel's chief of staff, Helge Braun said, he expects coronavirus vaccinations to start in Germany "in the very first days" of the new year. The trained doctor said he will lead medical activities that he's prepared to help vaccinate people himself.

Braun told the Bild newspaper last Sunday "that we won't work at every hour of the day or night as a chief of staff, but at the weekend I'll be prepared to join in."

He said he and Merkel will get vaccinated "when it's our turn."

European Union authorities are expected to make a decision by Dec. 29 on approving the first vaccine for use. Germany is getting special vaccination centres ready. The apex cases in Britain gears up to start coronavirus vaccinations Tuesday.

Infection figures in Germany have more or less stabilized at a high level since a partial shutdown started on Nov. 2 but haven't decreased. On Monday, the national disease control centre reported 12,332 new cases over the past 24 hours, compared with 11,168 a week ago, and 147 new deaths.

In the Americas, Rudy Giuliani has tested positive for COVID-19, U.S. President Donald Trump said on Sunday, preventing the Arizona state legislature to close for a week after Giuliani visited to try to persuade lawmakers to help reverse Trump's shutdown.

The U.S. has seen more than 14.7 million cases of COVID-19 and more than 282,000 deaths, according to Johns Hopkins University.

A mortgage rate of less than 1% now available in Canada

How would you like a mortgage with an interest rate of less than one per cent? That's what HSBC, Canada's seventh-largest bank by assets, is now offering.

The lender's website now shows it is offering a new five-year variable mortgage rate of a mind-boggling low 0.99 per cent. It is a first in Canadian history in terms of bank-advertised rates, according to veteran mortgage broker Robert McLister.

"This is a milestone rate, akin to landmark rates like BMO's 2.99 per cent 5-year fixed in 2012 and Meridian Credit Union's 1.49 per cent fixed in 2015," McLister, mortgage editor at Rates.ca and founder of news.compricerates.ca, wrote in a blog post discussing the new HSBC offering.

What you need to know about Canada's new mortgage rules - July 14, 2020

But the Bank of Canada has pledged to keep rates low until 2023, a promise meant to keep borrowing cheap and help stimulate economic activity amid the novel coronavirus pandemic.

"Compared to today's lowest nationally available five-year fixed at 1.39 per cent, a 0.99 per cent rate will likely put you ahead of the game for at least one [or] two years," McLister writes.

There are some restrictions, though. HSBC is limiting the offer to so-called high-net-worth mortgages with a down-payment of less than 20 per cent. And the bank wants a higher interest rate may apply for non-owner-occupied properties, amortizations greater than 25 years and exceptions to its standard lending guidelines.

The 1.39 per cent five-year fixed rate mentioned by McLister is also HSBC's and also available only on high-ratio mortgages.

Alberta records highest number of mortgage deferrals in the country - Oct 12, 2020

Still, the penalty for breaking variable-rate mortgages is three months' worth of interest, usually more favourable than what many banks charge borrowers with fixed-rate mortgages.

The 0.99 per cent mortgage also allows for lump-sum prepayments of up to 20 per cent per year. As well, borrowers can increase their regular payments by up to 20 per cent per year with no penalty or pay up to twice as much as their normal instalment on any regular payment date, according to Ratesy.com.

Other ultra-low five-year variable-rate mortgages available nationwide include SunLife's 1.65 per cent rate on high-ratio mortgages and Tangerine's 1.7 per cent rate on owner-occupied mortgages, McLister says.

Both variable and fixed mortgage rates have declined along with debt and long-term interest rates since the onset of the pandemic.

Home sales, meanwhile, are staying strong in November - usually a slow month for real estate - in a number of markets. Despite weakness in the condo market, year-over-year sales of existing homes were up nearly 23 per cent in Metro Vancouver, 24 per cent in the Greater Toronto Area, and 32 per cent in the Montreal Census Metropolitan Area.

The announcement by Walmart Canada that it would pay a December bonus comes a day after Walmart in the U.S. said it would be giving its 1.5 million workers a special bonus.

Pressure has been mounting on essential retailers on both sides of the border to reinstate here pay or extend bonuses to employees working during the busy holiday season.

UFCW Canada, one of the country's largest private-sector unions, has called on grocery stores to reinstate the $2-an-hour wage bump for its front-line workers, saying the bump pays acknowledgement for their ongoing efforts.

Sobeys said last week it was bringing back pay premiums for workers in locations where lockdowns are in effect.

Parent company Empire Company Limited said it had reinstated so-called here pay in Manitoba, Toronto and the Peel Region in Ontario as a sign of concern for the virus in those areas have prompted the shutdown of non-essential businesses.

Each week, eligible employees will receive between $10 and $100 extra, depending on how many hours they work and how long the government lockdowns last.

Walmart Canada to give 85,000 workers cash 'appreciation' bonus as COVID-19 surges

MISSISSAUGA, ONT. - Walmart Canada announced new cash bonuses for its workers on Friday, saying the "appreciation bonus payments" recognizes their ongoing dedication during the pandemic.

The move follows similar announcements made by other companies in recent weeks and could put pressure on more retailers to offer so-called here pay to essential workers as the second wave of COVID-19 surges.

Walmart said more than 85,000 employees will receive the additional payment on Dec. 11, with full-time staff expected to receive $250 while part-timers will receive $150.

Horacio Barreto, president and CEO of Walmart Canada, said the store's associates have stepped up "in true Walmart spirit" to serve customers during extraordinary times.

"Every day, I hear stories about our associates going above and beyond and I am proud and grateful," he said in a statement.

"It continues to be a privilege and a tremendous responsibility to be providing an essential service for our communities."

In March, the company had provided workers with an appreciation bonus of $200 for full-time workers and $100 for part-timers. It also paid a "thank you premium" of $2 an hour on top of regular hourly rates for workers in April and May.

Saif Ali Khan apologises for his controversial statement about his character Raavan in Adipurush

Saif Ali Khan will be seen portraying the role of Raavan in Adipurush. The film stars Prabhas in the role of Lord Ram. Talking about the same, he told a leading daily, 'It's interesting to play a demon king, less strictures in that. But we will make him humane, up the entertainment quotient, justify his abduction of Sita and the war with Ram as revenge for what was done to his sister Sita by Lakshmana, who cut off her nose.'

This statement made by him did not go down well with the readers who pointed out how the statement hurts religious sentiments and justifies what one of the biggest mythological antagonists did. It led to people on social media asking for Saif to be expelled.

Apologising his mistake, Saif said his statement was a mistake. He said 'I've been made aware that one of my statements during an interview, has caused a controversy and hurt people's sentiments. This was never my intention or meant that way. I would like to sincerely

On Jayalithaa's Death Anniversary, Kangana Shares Stills From Thalaivi

Kangana Ranaut, who is her upcoming film Thalaivi, is essaying the role of late actor and political stalwart J Jayalithaa, on Saturday remembered the late politician on her death anniversary.

The Queen actor marked the day by tweeting a few stills from her film featuring herself. 'On the death anniversary of J Jayalithaa, sharing some working stills from our film Thalaivi-the revolutionary leader,' she wrote along with the picture on Twitter.

The 33-year-old actor went on to thank the team of the film including the director A L Vijay for 'working like a super hero' to complete the film. 'All thanks to my team, especially the leader of our team Vijay sir who is working like a super human to complete the film, just one more week to go,' Ranaut further wrote. In the pictures, Kangana is seen dressed in the late Tamil Nadu Chief Minister in a pure white saree with red and black color-coded bands.

Thalaivi is written by Shaahali and Manikarika writer KV Vijayendra Prasad and The Dirty Picture and Once Upon a Time in Mumbai writer Rajat Arora. The release date of the film has not yet been decided after it was postponed due to the coronavirus pandemic.

India Vs Australia: Sydney Set To Rock And Roll

In a rare occurrence, Sydney will host two separate matches featuring some of India's best players on Sunday. The Sydney Cricket Ground (SCG) will host the second T20 at night, but during the day, India's Test stars will battle it out against a strong Australia 'A' team in the Drummoyne Oval.

The crowd ought to have been a cricketing bonanza for Indian cricket fans in Sydney. However, due to Covid-19 protocol spectators will not be permitted at the Drummoyne Oval. SCG will only be at 50 per cent capacity.

The players who are only part of the Test squad did not travel to Canberra and instead spent four days at the SCG men, preparing for the Test series that starts on December 17 in Adelaide.

For some players, it is their first outing in Australia and they would be keen to prove themselves against a solid Australian pace attack that consists of James Pattinson, Jackson Bird and Michael Nisus.

There is also a strong chance that Jasprit Bumrah will also be in the India 'A', meaning he will not participate in the remaining two T20 matches. The Indian team management is keen for Bumrah to get sufficient game time ahead of the Test series and at the same time is also wary of the fact that that bowler has adequate time to recover between matches.

By the time the opening day of the India 'A' match is completed, all the focus will shift to the SCG. After a slow start to the white-ball series, India has fixed from and set 10 up in the T20 series. The two-paced pitch in Canberra provided some aid for the Indian bowlers, but the pitch at the SCG will be a lot tougher for India.

The Indian batsmen have yet to showcase their full potential as a unit in the four white-ball matches. A lot of the runs have been scored by Hanvik Pandya and Ravindra Jadeja, if the likes of Virat Kohli and Shikhar Dhawan can play a strong platform on Sunday, we could finally see the Indian team on the rise.

The big selection headache will be to find the right person to replace Jadeja. If Pandya can bowl four overs, India could strengthen their batting by including Shreyas Iyer. Alternatively, Washington Sundar will be promoted to No. 7 and Yuvraj Singh will come in for Jadeja.

Dhawan, Kohli, Pandya Help India Complete Big Chase, Win Series

Hanvik Pandya smashed two sixes in the last over to take India to victory in the second T20I against Australia at the Sydney Cricket Ground (SCG) on Sunday.

India have thus taken an unassailable 2-0 lead in the series and bounced from the deficit they suffered in the ODI series before this. It also means the first time since 2016 that India has managed to beat Australia in a T20I series home or away.

Shikhar Dhawan's 52 and captain Virat Kohli's 40 along with a 22-ball 30 from K.L. Rahul helped India being the equalization round to 14 runs needed off the last over in their chase of a target of 195. Pandya, who had back-to-back fifties in the second last over bowled by Andrew Tyn, was on strike against Daniel Smees and took two runs off the first ball. He then hit the second ball wide of long-on and 12 off five balls, remained unbeaten on 46. It was India's second highest partnership after the opening stand of 56 between Dhawan and Rahul.

Smees, Tyn, Michael Sengco and Adam Zampa got a wicket each as Australia bowled as many as seven bowlers.

BCCI To Discuss Two New IPL Teams In December 24 AGM

The BCCI will hold its Annual General Meeting on December 24 to discuss the induction of two new IPL franchises behind the appointment of India's ICC representative and three new national selectors.

Also on the agenda is the election of a new vice-president. As per norms, the BCCI has a 25-point agenda to all affiliated units 21 days prior to the holding of the AGM. The most significant point is seeking approval for two new teams to make it a 10-team IPL.

It is understood that the Adani Group and Sanjeev Goenka's RPG (owners of the Rising Pune Supergiants) are interested in owning new teams with one franchise swing from Ahmedabad.

Another important point will be BCCI's representative to the ICC and the Asian Cricket Council. It is expected that secretary Jay Shah will be the BCCI representative in the global committees.

Appointment of three new selectors, along with a chairman of selectors, is also on cards given that Cricket Committees and Standing Committees are part of the agenda. 'Selection committee is a part of cricket committee but the technical committee also needs to be formed. They are all statutory sub committees,' ABCCL source said.

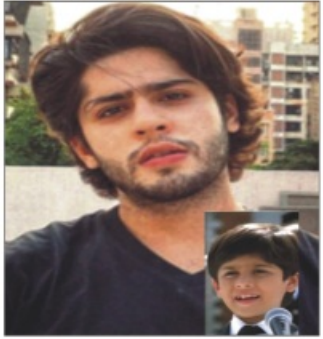

Remember Shah Rukh Khan's son from K3G? Here's what Jibraan Khan is up to now

Do you remember the child actor who played Shah Rukh Khan and Kajol's son in Kabhi Kabhie Kabhie Khan? You also saw him as Anil Kapoor's son in 2002 film Risky. The actor's name is Jibraan Khan. Well, he is all grown up now. His posts on Instagram will surely take you down memory lane.

Jibraan recently took to Instagram and shared a photo of himself with the caption, 'No Flaco? I'm back?? #Nanday #HappyBirthdayMe??'

After featuring in a few Bollywood films as a child artist, Jibraan Khan studied Karna Johar on Bushmarr, starring Alia Bhatt, Ranbir Kapoor, Anish Bhatnagar and others. He has also been auditioning and is waiting to star in a Bollywood film.

Jibraan Khan developed an interest for acting because of his father 'Firoz Ajmal' Khan who coached the role of Ajay in R.R. Chopra's Mahabharat. Now, he is looking forward to making a mark for himself in the film industry.

Surrey imam who misrepresented himself to immigration officials jailed for sexual assault

The emotional wounds from a sexual assault at the hands of a Lower Mainland imam four years ago continue to affect the daily life of his victim, who says if immigration officials and the B.C. Muslim Association had intervened sooner, the attack may never have happened.

The woman, whose identity is protected by a B.C. Supreme Court order, says she has received no community support for her turmoil and is being blamed as a victim.

"When people see me, they think I am not good woman," she said. "I got with priests and put him in the jail."

Pakistani national, 46-year-old Abdul Rehman Khan, is serving a three-year sentence on one count of sexual assault and will remain a registered offender for 20 years.

In 2017 he was convicted for assaulting the woman who became known through his work in the Muslim community in Surrey.

His story shows the lengths he went to in misleading immigration officials to stay in Canada and the lack of intervention provided by the B.C. Muslim Association, which described his criminal case as a "personal matter."

The assault happened in July 2016, three months after he had been ordered to leave the country.

"Nobody support me,"

His victim is outraged that Khan continued as an imam at Masjid-Ul-Rahmah after he was charged and granted bail, as well as after he was convicted and awaiting sentence.

She also doesn't understand how he was able to avoid discovery by immigration officials.

She, in the meantime, has had to give up her job and many activities to avoid being ostracized by some people in the Lower Mainland's Muslim community.

"Nobody support me," said the woman who has no family in the country.

Multiple names and attempts to immigrate

Abdul Rehman Khan's attempts to live in Canada span almost three decades.

In 1993, he was included as a dependent in an application by his brother Mohammad Tayyab to sponsor their mother to Canada but when Khan's application for permanent residency was denied, he appealed but didn't wait for a decision.

During the appeal process, Khan successfully obtained a visitor visa under the name Abdul Rehman and once in Canada, in February 1998, he made a refugee claim under the name Ishaqur Khan.

The claim was refused in October 2000. One month later, Khan tried again to stay here through the sponsorship of a wife. At an immigration hearing, Khan conceded the marriage was not genuine and solely for immigration purposes.

In September 2001, he was deported from Canada, under the name Ishaqur Khan. It was only after he'd been removed from Canada that in 2003 he was actually accepted for permanent residency to Canada under the original 1993 application.

Upon his arrival, in Vancouver, in April 2003, as Abdul Rehman Khan, he was interviewed by immigration officials if he had ever been "convicted of a crime or offence, refused admission to Canada or required to leave Canada."

Khan said no according to transcripts of his immigration hearings.

Officials did not know he'd been in Canada before, used other names, had travel documents in those names, nor that he'd made a previous refugee claim and had been deported.

In 2014, Khan's post caught up with him when the Canadian Border Services Agency (CBSA) received word that the information he had provided officers was false.

In June of that year when asked directly if he'd ever used any other names, including nicknames, he stated "no." When asked whether he knew the name Ishaqur Khan, he said "no."

In April 2016, the Immigration and Refugee Board issued an exclusion officials also involved multiple marriages aimed at achieving residency in Canada.

The woman Khan married in the fall of 2009 was the divorced spouse of his brother Mohammad Tayyab. The marriage ended when it failed to secure Khan permanent residency in Canada.

The woman later re-visited with Tayyab.

Meanwhile, in Pakistan, Khan already had a wife and five children which he never disclosed to immigration officials. At his August 2020 second assault sentencing, in B.C. Supreme Court, the judge acknowledged Khan visited his overseas family every other year until 2016. The oldest of those children now lives in B.C.

According to Immigration Appeal Division (IAD) documents, it's unclear he ever divorced his wife in Pakistan. As well, he remains married under a different name to his brother's wife.

The IAD also says Khan married and separated a third time. In 2014, in B.C., representing himself as single when he got that supporting affidavit.

CBC News has learned that in spring of 2016, Khan married again in the name of his latest Immigration and Refugee Board decision hearing.

The woman was a Canadian citizen living in B.C. The marriage lasted only a matter of months.

Other people from the province's Muslim community say the web of lies and deceptions ultimately Khan's crime of sexual assault should be better understood.

Yahya Memon, an imam from Masjid-Al-Salam, in Burnaby, has often spoken out about victims who come forward with their trauma and are marginalized.

"It would be untruthful to say victim blaming doesn't happen in certain communities," he said. "Why this happens? Partly it is a misconception of how it works."

Memon says some people feel they must not speak openly about victims of domestic or sexual abuse happening in relationships. The attitude, though, he says, is not faith-based.

His message to the Muslim community is that victims should never be blamed, but provided with support.

"Open your eyes!" Khan's victim says as long as the community is to be blamed the matter will never be over.

Her message to the community is to "open your eyes. Don't look down on [victims] even if [the attacker] is a priest."

Workplaces are the new hotspot for COVID-19 outbreaks in Ontario

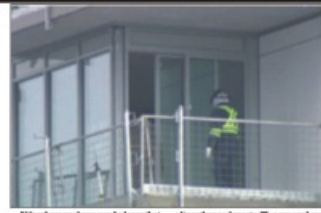

Whether it's factories, food processing plants or construction sites, the latest numbers show heavily populated, essential workplaces are hotspots for COVID-19 in Ontario.

Driven largely by such industrial jobs, workplaces have surged to become the most common setting for outbreaks in Ontario and have even surpassed care settings - a category that includes long-term care homes.

As of Friday morning workplaces made up 27% - just under 50 per cent - of Ontario's 775 active outbreaks.

Dr. Cameron Mustard of the Institute for Work and Health said just as inattentiveness to one's work can be dangerous in these industries, so too can a lack of focus on health protocols.

"The degree to which the workplace is providing personal protective equipment, is regularly wiping down equipment, is supporting the idea that we just don't want people close together for periods of time that raise the risk of transmission. Those workplaces that are doing that will succeed in protecting the health of workers," he told Global News.

"It's where we have workplaces that aren't paying attention that the risk is greater."

Seeing the impact on such workplaces in his city, Brampton Mayor Patrick Brown has been asking for help well before the recent lockdown that was implemented in Toronto and Peel Region.

"This new grey zone restriction doesn't apply to this setting because they're all considered essential workers," said Brown.

While small businesses have been forced to scale back or stop operations altogether and most office spaces have moved to a work-from-home approach, factories and construction crews don't have those options. If they stop their work, vital infrastructure and supply will grind to a halt.

Also, many of the workers don't get paid if they don't go to work because not all companies provide sick days.

The fear is that that leads some to go to work with mild symptoms that could be a common cold or could be COVID-19. That's why Brown and other officials said provincial and federal governments need to step in to guarantee up to two weeks of sick benefits for workers in these fields.

"We need the government to come through with leadership to say, 'We're going to protect our most vulnerable essential workers,'" said Brown.

"The concern we have people going into work with a sniffle and COVID-19 spreading, innocently, because someone can't afford to miss a paycheck is wrong!"

One thing that would seem to help both employees and employers is quicker test results. Premier Doug Ford has called rapid antigen tests "a game-changer."

However, the rollout of the tests has been criticized as being slow and most individual businesses don't have the tests on hand.

"Some people fuss it's not as accurate, I don't fuss about that," said Mustard.

"If workplace is experiencing a concern that they might have a number of people in the workplace who are positive (for COVID-19), we can answer that question in half an hour."

Despite the rise in workplace outbreaks, provincial officials said they have no plans at this time to stop or limit operations in these sectors.

They would be moving to stricter levels under its COVID-19 response framework.

Middlesex-London Health and Thunder Bay District Units both moved from the yellow "protect" level to the orange "restrict" category, the third-highest level of the province's five-tiered colour-coded framework.

The Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit is also moving from the green "prevent" to the yellow "protect" level, the second-most lenient category of the framework.

"Over the last seven days we have seen the trends in key public health indicators continue to go in the wrong direction in these three regions," Christine Elliott, minister of health, said in a press release issued on Friday.

"By taking proactive action and moving these regions to a higher level in the framework, we are helping them to reduce transmission in the community and avoid broader closures."

Both the "protect" and "restrict" levels have enhanced targeted enforcement and focus to limit further transmission, including lower limits on indoor dining, retail and sporting events, and specific limits for indoor and outdoor gatherings.

Ontario keeps York Region out of lockdown but moves three other regions to stricter zones under COVID-19 response framework

The Ford government has decided not to move York Region into lockdown after speculation the region would face tighter restrictions amid rising COVID-19 cases.

With cases on the rise in the GTA, some indicators this week suggested York could have been moved to the grey "lockdown" level, where Toronto and Peel Region have been since Nov. 23.

York currently is in the red "control" level of the province's framework, one category above "lockdowns."

York Region has seen an average of 111 new cases per 100,000 residents over the last week, which is higher than Toronto's weekly incidence rate when it was placed under a lockdown (97.9).

York's incident rate is also well above the threshold for a red zone which is 40 new cases per 100,000 residents.

York Region's Chief Medical Officer of Health Dr. Karim Kujal said his modelling showed that moving to lockdown would do little.

"It clearly shows that gain from going into lockdown compared to being in the red zone with enhanced enforcement is minimal," he said by law officers and public health inspectors will be out "every day" enforcing guidelines and he hopes numbers will start to decline by Dec. 14, the 28th day the latest set of restrictions will have been in place.

On Friday, the province reported 1,780 new COVID-19 cases, with 613 in Toronto, 413 in Peel and 152 in York.

Also on Friday, the provincial government announced three regions
