Canada Post worksite hit by major virus outbreak excluded from provincial inspections

TORONTO - Ontario labour inspectors are homing in on warehouses and distribution centres, but the site of a major workplace COVID-19 outbreak isn't included in the ongoing inspections: Canada Post.

More than 300 employees at the postal service's Gateway facility in Mississauga, Ont., have tested positive for COVID-19 since the start of the year and one employee has died. Canada Post advised customers across the country to expect delivery delays as the outbreak impacted operations at the central mail delivery hub.

But because Canada Post is a federally regulated Crown corporation, its inspection falls outside provincial jurisdiction.

"The president of the national union representing postal workers said consistent standards should be applied to all workplaces, noting that the outbreak has had an 'enormous impact on all postal workers.'"

"The virus doesn't distinguish between provincial and federal workplaces and neither do provincial inspectors," Jan Simpson, president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, said in a statement.

"Workplaces and workers in the Peel Region have been hit hard by COVID-19. It's in everyone's best interest that all workplaces be inspected to ensure the health and safety of workers."

Ontario Labour Minister Monte McNaughton said earlier this month that the ministry chose to focus on warehouses and distribution centres in Peel Region - the hard-hit region of the Greater Toronto Area - noting that such workplaces employ a high number of temporary and seasonal workers.

"Every employer, I don't care ... who they're owed by, knows the rules that they need to follow," McNaughton said in an interview when the warehouse and distribution blizzard was announced on Feb. 10. "There's no excuse anymore."

In the first week of the inspection blitz in Peel Region, inspectors visited 59 warehouses and issued 10 tickets and one order. They found compliance was just over 64 percent, according to the ministry. However, McNaughton said the federal government has responsibility for the Canada Post workplace. He said all levels of government need to work together to make sure safety measures are in place.

Ontario reports 1,058 new COVID-19 cases as hot spot York Region joins red zone

Ontario reported another 1,058 new cases of COVID-19 on Monday, as one long-standing hot spot for the illness moves back into the province's colour-coded system of restrictions.

The new cases in today's update include 325 in Toronto, 215 in Peel Regions and 87 in York Region, where businesses are allowed to reopen and non-essential retailers and restaurants can welcome customers back with capacity limits.

York formally moved into the red "contain" level of Ontario's reopening framework this morning, meaning its stay-at-home orders have been lifted.

The region has consistently logged one of Ontario's highest COVID-19 case counts, but the local medical officer of health requested that the province move it back to the tiered framework to bring it in line with most of Ontario's other public health units.

A stay-at-home order remains in effect only for Toronto, Peel and North Bay-Pearce Sound until at least March 8.

Other public health units that saw double-digit increases in confirmed cases were:

- Hamilton: 36
- Ottawa: 51
- Waterloo Region: 48
- Simcoe Muskoka: 47
- Durham Region: 45
- Thunder Bay: 32
- Halton Region: 28
- Northwestern: 26
- Wellington-Dufferin-Guelph: 18
- Niagara Region: 14
- Lambton: 10
- Windsor-Essex: 10

(Note: All of the figures used in this story are found on the Ministry of Health's COVID-19 dashboard or its Daily Epidemiologic Summary. The number of cases for any region may differ from what is reported by the local public health unit, because local units report figures at different times.)

The cases logged today came as Ontario's lab network completed just 31,163 tests for SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19, and reported a net positivity rate of 3.3 percent.

The seven-day average of daily cases rose to 1,045. A precipitous fall in the seven-day average that began on Jan. 11 has started to level off.

There are now about 10,335 confirmed, active infections provincewide.

According to the Ministry of Health, there were 646 people with COVID-19 in hospitals. Of those, 280 were being treated in intensive care and 189 needed a ventilator.

Public health units also recorded another 11 deaths of people with the illness, putting Ontario's official toll at 6,872.

Meanwhile, the Ministry of Education reported 55 more school-related cases of the illness, 47 students and eight staff members.

The ministry also released early results from its asymptomatic testing program, which was recently introduced as part of the government's plan to reopen all publicly funded schools.

A total of 3,706 students were tested at 416 schools, broken down by public health unit as:

- Region: 40 schools in Toronto
- 35 schools in Ottawa
- Three schools in Sudbury
- Two schools in Hamilton

The testing confirmed COVID-19 cases in 32 students, or 86 per cent of all those tested. Two additional tests are pending in Peel Region. The ministry said it plans to offer weekly updates on the results of the program.

Later today, the province's chief public health officer is due to testify before a commission investigating how Ontario's response to COVID-19 affected long-term care homes.

Dr. David Williams' comments will not be live-streamed, but the Long-Term Care COVID-19 Commission is expected to post a transcript at a later date.

Vaccines rollout: Moreover, the province administered 12,922 doses of COVID-19 vaccines yesterday, the Ministry of Health said. A total of 240,669 people have now received both shots of a vaccine and are fully immunized.

Across Ontario, the vaccine rollout is being spread across 34 public health units that each have their own strategies. During a press conference on Monday, Solicitor General Sylvia Jones said the individual units know their communities best. "They are not new organizations," she said, adding that they have historic data on data on their communities and have close relationships with the hospitals in each region.

'Extra-large' vaccination site to open in Peel region next month

Peel Public Health has converted a field house into an "extra-large" vaccination site, set to open next month.

Mississauga Mayor Bonnie Crombie tweeted a first look at the Paramount Fine Food Centre's converted field house on Sunday, saying that once the spot reaches full capacity "up to 600 people an hour can be vaccinated."

A spokesperson for Peel Public Health said, "we are working as quickly as possible to get the site, which was used to host events before the onset of the pandemic, in one of several 'extra large' sites Peel Public Health is using to try to vaccinate as many people as possible, as quickly as the supply chain allows."

"Extra large centres like this will allow us to vaccinate many residents at the same time," said the spokesperson.

In keeping with public health directives, the centre will join other vaccine sites in prioritizing people who are 80 years old and older, long-term care residents, high-risk retirement home residents, and priority healthcare workers, among others.

Public Health says vaccines will be administered by paramedics, community physicians, and pharmacists.
