Canada to receive 9.5M vaccine doses this week thanks to influx of Moderna shots

OTTAWA — Canada is poised to receive around 9.5 million COVID-19 vaccine doses this week thanks to a massive infusion of shots from Moderna.

The federal government says the Massachusetts-based pharmaceutical firm will deliver a total of 7.1 million jabs in two separate shipments this week.

The first shipment of 2.9 million doses is scheduled to arrive and be sent to provinces in the middle of the week. The remaining 4.2 million will arrive later in the week, but won't be sent to provinces and territories until next week.

Another 2.4 million doses are also due to come from Pfizer and BioNTech, which have been consistently delivering large weekly shipments since mid-March.

The shipments expected over the next seven days will more than double the number of shots Moderna has sent Canada's way. The company had only delivered 6.2 million by the end of last week, according to the Public Health Agency of Canada.

The federal government has received more than 22.5 million Pfizer-BioNTech doses and nearly 2.9 million Oxford-AstraZeneca jabs, with another 1 million of the latter scheduled for delivery later this month.

Around 330,000 doses of the single-shot Johnson & Johnson vaccine were also delivered, but Health Canada has decided not to distribute them over concerns they may have been tainted.

The Prime Minister's Office later provided a breakdown showing more than 7 million of the doses being donated are from pharmaceutical firm Novovax, whose vaccine has yet to be approved for use in Canada.

The remainder are AstraZeneca doses and shots from Johnson & Johnson that Canada bought through COVAX, an international vaccine sharing initiative.

All told, G7 leaders confirmed their intent to donate more than 1 billion doses to low-income countries in the next year.

That commitment falls far short of the 11 billion doses the World Health Organization said is needed to vaccinate at least 70 per cent of the world's population and truly end the COVID-19 pandemic.

Canada has secured delivery of more than 100 million doses for the year — more than what's needed to give its population of nearly 38 million two doses per person.

The government also says it will not accept anymore Johnson & Johnson doses until an inspection of a Baltimore production facility that produced the previous batch.

While Canada is poised to receive millions of vaccine doses this week, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau announced the conclusion of the G7 summit in Britain on Sunday that Canada would be donating 13 million surplus jabs to poorer countries struggling to vaccinate their populations.

Trudeau said the donations would not affect Canada's own immunization efforts.

"This global commitment on vaccines is in addition to and in parallel with our vaccine rollout at home," he said. "We have millions of doses being delivered into the country each week, and every day more and more people get their first and second shots."

British Columbia is joining the list of provinces gradually easing restrictions this week

British Columbia is joining the list of provinces gradually easing restrictions this week. Premier John Horgan and Provincial Health Officer Dr. Bonnie Henry announced Monday the province will move to Step 2 Tuesday, given a drop in COVID-19 case counts and hospitalizations and a rise in vaccination rates.

Under the eased restrictions, bigger outdoor and indoor gatherings will be allowed, indoor fitness classes can resume, as can recreational travel around B.C.

The four-step reopening plan released last month said the province could move to Step 2 on June 15 provided case counts and hospitalizations dropped and at least 65 per cent of eligible adults had received at least one dose of vaccine.

Quebec is also easing COVID-19-related restrictions in some parts of the province, including Montreal and Quebec City.

As of Monday morning, all the regions that were previously classified as orange zones on the province's pandemic alert system have been downgraded to yellow.

Those include Montreal, Quebec City, Laval, Montreuil to the south of Montreal, the Laurentians, Lanaudiere, Estrie, Outaouais and parts of Bas-St-Laurent.

The change means people from two different households can gather indoors, outdoor team sports can resume and more people can attend weddings, funerals and religious services.

Quebec has reported fewer than 200 COVID-19 cases a day for more than a week, and hospitalizations have been falling steadily. Health officials in the province on Monday reported one additional death and 123 new cases of COVID-19.

The update came as officials announced that border restrictions between Ontario and Quebec would be lifted later this week after months

Coronavirus: What's happening in Canada and around the world Monday

What's happening across Canada

As of 2:15 p.m. ET on Monday, Canada had reported 1,402,838 confirmed cases of COVID-19, with 16,744 considered active. A CBC News tally of deaths stood at 25,939. More than 29.1 million COVID-19 vaccine doses had been administered so far across the country, according to CBC's vaccine tracker.

In Ontario, more people will be able to book an accelerated second dose of COVID-19 vaccine as of Monday. Those who received a first jab of the AstraZeneca-Oxford vaccine can now book their second shot after eight weeks. The Ontario government had previously set a minimum wait time of 12 weeks for people who took a first dose of AstraZeneca.

The province, which entered the first phase of its reopening plan on Friday, reported four additional deaths on Monday and 447 new cases of COVID-19.

In the North, there were no new cases of COVID-19 reported in Nunavut on Monday, Premier Joe Savikataaq said on Twitter.

The Northwest Territories and Yukon, which declared an outbreak in Whitehorse over the weekend, had not yet provided updated figures for the day. "The outbreak is linked to youth and adults who are not yet vaccinated," said a statement from Yukon health officials released on Sunday.

In Atlantic Canada, Nova Scotia reported eight new cases of COVID-19 Monday and New Brunswick reported one. Newfoundland and Labrador had four new cases.

There were no new cases of COVID-19 reported in Prince Edward Island by early Monday afternoon.

In the Prairie provinces, Manitoba reported two deaths and 124 new cases of COVID-19 Monday. Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Brent Roussin told reporters during a briefing that all of the patients currently in ICU with COVID-19 had not been vaccinated.

Saskatchewan, meanwhile, reported no deaths and 65 new cases of COVID-19 on Sunday.

In Alberta on Sunday, the province reported one death and 165 new cases of COVID-19. The update came a day from around the world reported to the WHO have declined for seven weeks in a row, but he noted that deaths aren't falling as quickly.

"The number of deaths reported last week was similar to the previous week," he said.

In the Asia-Pacific region, Japanese Prime Minister Yoshihide Suga said he felt reassured by other Group of Seven leaders showing "firm support" to his determination to host the Tokyo Olympics next month. Suga told reporters while in Britain for the G7 Summit that he explained to other leaders Japan's commitment to ensure through virus control measures that the Games would be safe and secure.

"I'm feeling reassured by the firm support I received from all the other leaders," Suga said Sunday before heading back to Tokyo. "I have renewed my determination to make the Tokyo Games a success at any cost."

Many Indian states eased restrictions including Delhi, as the number of new infections dropped to the lowest in more than two months.

In Africa, Kenya has received a $750 million US loan from the World Bank to support its budget and help the East African economy recover from the effects of the pandemic, the multilateral lender said.

In the Americas, Mexican health officials said the country will receive its first shipment of J&J vaccines on Tuesday.

Latin American nations' capacity to fight corruption diminished over the past year as the pandemic absorbed resources and offered politicians in some countries the space to weaken judicial bodies, according to a report.

In the Middle East, Lebanon has vaccinated a daily record of people against COVID-19, raising the total number of shots administered around the country against the virus to more than 1 million.

Canada's PM calls Russia a rival, wants NATO unity in face of authoritarianism, China

BRUSSELS — Canada's prime minister used his time at a summit of political and military allies underlining the need to present a united front against Russia, China and the general threat of authoritarianism.

Justin Trudeau was in Brussels on Monday attending a meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and then a Canada-EU summit.

Trudeau began his day by meeting with the president of Latvia, where the Canadian military is leading a NATO alliance battlegroup whose mission is to deter Russian aggression in the region.

The prime minister then sat down with NATO Secretary-General Jens Stoltenberg, where he said the alliance is entering a new chapter and that Canada has always been a defender of the North American alliance with Europe.

Some summit leaders observed the gathering had a renewed sense of unity after what Trudeau called an "interesting" period at NATO, without necessarily having to name the reason why.

It's the first time to take place in several years without former U.S. president Donald Trump in the White House, who had called NATO "obsolete."

"It's different," Stoltenberg said when asked about the dynamics of the alliance with U.S. President Joe Biden now in the room.

During his earlier meeting with Stoltenberg, Biden reinforced the importance of the U.S.'s participation in NATO, including its historical past, and North America's commitment to its European allies.

And for the first time, the military alliance took a stand on China.

The closing position statement issued on topics discussed at the summit and endorsed by NATO leaders characterized China as a security concern that behaves assertively in an attempt to undermine the global rules-based system.

He said China had "coercive policies" and expressed concern over its growing arsenal of nuclear warheads.

The leaders did, however, agree to welcome chances to work with China on issues that impact the alliance, like fighting climate change.

That is also the position Trudeau has adopted.

He has said that to reduce greenhouse gas emissions worldwide, China needs to be included, which he believes can be done while still opposing its human rights violations and working with other allies to become a competitive economic and trade partner.

While sitting down with Stoltenberg, Trudeau said the NATO allies "were more united than ever."

"And it is more important than ever that we be united."

Trudeau said nations need to stand together to fight crises from COVID-19 to climate change, which is why he said Canada stepped up to offer to become a policy hub looking at global warming's effects on defence and security.

There's also a geopolitical shift, he added, with the world now seeing a general rise in authoritarianism.

He said NATO allies need to demonstrate there is an alternative to what he called the "strong arm" tactics that countries like China are taking.

How vaccines can crush the variants and make reopening permanent in Canada

Canada is poised to battle back the more contagious coronavirus variants that threaten to jeopardize reopening plans across the country due to a huge uptick in vaccine supply, a willingness from Canadians to get the shots and some promising new vaccines research.

Daily COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations and deaths have dropped dramatically across the country to levels not seen since the fall, while shipments of vaccines are set to grow substantially — with more than 5.3 million doses arriving next week alone.

To date, more than 28 million vaccine doses have been administered across Canada, about 72 per cent of eligible Canadians have at least one shot and close to 12 per cent have two.

Yet there have been growing concerns over the spread of variants that have raised doubts about whether we can safely reopen society in Canada's hardest hit regions, particularly as the United Kingdom grapples with the variant known as delta, or B.1.617.

Despite the many uncertainties that lie ahead, experts say that early data from the U.K. and a new study just released in British Columbia point to the same way forward — getting as many shots in arms as soon as possible.

Variant vs. vaccines

A recent study from Public Health England (PHE) looked at just how effective the first dose is against the delta variant.

The study found the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine was 88 per cent effective against symptomatic disease from the delta variant two weeks after the second dose, compared to 93 per cent against the B.1.1.7 variant, also known as alpha.

Two doses of the AstraZeneca Oxford shot were found to be just 60 per cent effective against COVID-19 symptoms from delta, compared to 66 per cent against alpha.

And a single dose of Pfizer and AstraZeneca were each only about 33 per cent effective against delta.

Experts say it's important to remember that the study looked at the vaccine's ability to prevent COVID-19 symptoms, which can range from mild to severe, and the early estimates on vaccine effectiveness against the variant don't tell the whole story.

"One dose of the vaccine, whether it was Pfizer or AstraZeneca, will actually provide quite a bit of protection against severe illness and certainly against hospitalization," said Prof. Jason Kindrachuk, an assistant professor and Canada Research Chair in emerging viruses at the University of Manitoba.

"Yes we still need to get two doses, but you know what? Even with a single dose these vaccines work amazingly well."

Kindrachuk says that while delta reinforces the need to fully vaccinate high-risk individuals, like older Canadians and the immunocompromised, getting shots into as many arms as possible will continue to lower community transmission and the spread of variants overall.

"Any population that isn't vaccinated is a tinderbox that's waiting to explode and drive lots of cases and hospitalizations and new variants," said Prof. Alyson Kelvin, an assistant professor at Dalhousie University and virologist at the Canadian Center for Vaccinology and the Vaccine and Infectious Disease Organization in Saskatoon.

"The best thing that we can do is stick to a vaccination plan and keep going with it until our entire population is covered by not just one, but two doses. That's going to be the most effective strategy — not trying to get too caught up in the drama of a new variant."

Single dose has 'substantial' protection

New Canadian research from the B.C. Centre for Disease Control (BCCDC) also underscored the effectiveness of even just one dose of mRNA vaccines against the variants and provided new insight into the gamma variant, also known as P.1, for the first time.

The preprint study, which has not yet been peer reviewed, found that a single dose of either Pfizer or Moderna at the time, Skowronski says the team has their sights set on it in the near future.

"Looking at the data, we can be optimistic that we'll have a good per cent effectiveness against delta," said Kelvin, who was not involved in the study.

"Of course we want everybody to get the second dose but I still am very optimistic."

But Skowronski cautions Canadians not to draw too many conclusions from the data emerging from the U.K. on the delta variant, or any one study, due to the fact that it's largely observational and needs to be backed up by real-world immunogenicity research, which measures the immune responses that a vaccine generates.

"It's a signal of concern related to a variant of concern that warrants further evaluation, which is why we're on it," she said. "Then we react."

'Get the second dose'

Experts agree the biggest threat to Canadians as the treatment isn't variants — despite the dizzying pace of research being released worldwide — it's not being vaccinated at all.

"So far for the variants that we have encountered, about which we have had some initial shock and awe and then some settling of that, we've not seen a big impact," Skowronski said.

"Ultimately, we still want to get that second dose in and this is helping us reinforce and understand why that may be necessary."

Kelvin says the decision to delay second doses in Canada allowed for more single dose coverage, which ultimately prevented the virus from infecting more people, increasing hospitalizations and deaths and may have stopped the emergence of new variants there.

"What we want to watch for is: are these viruses changing significantly?... We want to keep on top of what's going on with new variants," she said.

"What we can all do is get vaccinated and try to reduce our contacts to reduce the opportunity for the virus to mutate — that's going to be the biggest role that we can play in controlling variants."

Kelvin says if Canada continues to drive COVID-19 levels down across the country, we should be able to maintain low levels of community transmission — which will largely be driven by pockets of people who aren't vaccinated.

"We're in a very different position than we were certainly in the early parts of this year," said Kindrachuk.

"Vaccinations are going to keep getting out and once we hit that threshold, things are going to change very, very quickly. I think they're already here, but I think they're going to change substantially in the next few weeks."

People's Party of Canada Leader Maxime Bernier arrested by RCMP in Manitoba

People's Party of Canada Leader Maxime Bernier was arrested after appearing at a speech attended by about 100 people in a southern Manitoba village on Friday afternoon.

Radio-Canada's Laiba Parnoo, who was covering the event, said the rally in St-Pierre-Jolys, which is about 57 kilometres south of Winnipeg, saw no more than 15 people in attendance.

After the event ended, Bernier got into a vehicle to head to a rally in nearby St. Malo, another small, rural community.

That's when he was pulled out of the vehicle by Mounties who handcuffed him and put him in the back seat of an RCMP vehicle.

Bernier spoke to Radio-Canada shortly before he was detained and said he got a ticket for violating public health orders at a rally in the nearby town of Niverville earlier Friday. He did not say how much he was fined — just that he planned to fight it.

An RCMP spokesperson confirmed Bernier was ticketed earlier in the day.

"It is the duty of the RCMP to enforce the laws of Manitoba, and those include public health orders," Bernier knew of the health orders and has already received a ticket. The continuation of the offence of violating the current public health orders in Manitoba has resulted in his arrest," Tara Seal said in an email.

Bernier was charged under the Public Health Act for assembling in a gathering at an outdoor public place and for failing to self-isolate once he got to Manitoba, and he will appear before a magistrate, Seal said.

Bernier was released Friday evening on the condition he abide by public health orders while he is in Manitoba, RCMP Sgt. Paul Managere said in a statement.

Manitoba Justice would not say when he might appear before the magistrate, as his case is now before the courts.

The penalization section of Manitoba's Public Health Act states the maximum sanction is a $100,000 fine, one year in jail or both.

Bernier had announced a tour of southern Manitoba this weekend that was set to include several stops at anti-lockdown rallies in spite of pandemic restrictions banning large events and requiring people to self-isolate when entering the province if they're not fully vaccinated.

A provincial spokesperson previously told CBC News that the province was aware of Bernier's planned rallies and would be conducting surveillance to gather video and other evidence.

At a news conference on Thursday morning, Premier Brian Pallister said Bernier would be "right in the pocket book" if he planned on violating Manitoba's public health orders.

Rights-violated, party claims

People's Party of Canada spokesperson Martin Masse said in a statement Bernier was "wrongfully arrested" on charges that violate his Charter rights.

"This isn't about COVID anymore. It's political repression. This is the kind of stuff countries like China and Russia do," Masse said.

The Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms said in a news release that it will appear in court on Bernier's behalf.

The Calgary-based organization has also been involved in challenges of lockdown measures across the country, including one in Manitoba that saw seven churches take the province to court over its pandemic powers. No decision has been issued yet on that challenge.

Akshay Kumar defeated Undertaker? Actor reveals the truth as Khiladiyon Ka Khiladi completes 25 years

Akshay Kumar's Khiladiyon Ka Khiladi has clocked 25 years of the film's release. On Sunday, Akshay shared a meme that read, "Raise your hand if you have defeated The Undertaker" as he celebrated the film, which released in 1996. Posting the meme on Instagram, Akshay also shared a fun fact. "It was wrestler Brian Lee who played The Undertaker in the film," he wrote.

Khiladiyon Ka Khiladi had a scene where Akshay's character fights the Undertaker. However, as the actor clarified, it was not actually the WWE wrestler but Brian Lee who was featured in the film. "A hilarious note to mark 25 years to the release of #KhiladiyonKaKhiladi tomorrow! A fun fact though: It was wrestler Brian Lee who played The Undertaker in the film," he tweeted.

Raj Kundra accuses ex-wife of having affair while being married to him

British-Indian businessman and actress Shilpa Shetty's husband Raj Kundra has claimed in an interview that his ex-wife Kavita allegedly had an affair while she was married to him, with his sister's husband. He cited the affair as the reason for divorce between him and his first wife.

"We were living in one house with my mum, dad and my sister and her husband had moved over from India to try and settle in the UK. She (ex-wife) grew very close to my ex-brother-in-law spending more and more time with him especially when I was out on business trips. Many of my family and even my driver would say something something fishy between those two and I would never believe it. I gave it credit. She never believed it... Kundra told Pitkavilla in an interview.

"The relationship that my wife and ex-brother-in-law Vaseem were sharing, going out for work together meeting and sitting in the same room so often, etc. I guess my sister felt it best to move back," he further told the portal.

Kundra's allegation comes after an old interview of Kavita went viral, where she revealed she was having an affair with a man, which is now being used by Kundra to accuse Shilpa of breaking her marriage.

Quizzed how his second wife Shilpa has reacted to the resurfaced video, Kundra claimed: "I was very angry. She again said ignore, don't worry. But I decided enough is enough she is not even aware I have given this interview. I am doing this because I think the truth finally needs to be told."

Kundra has a daughter with his ex-wife, with whom he parted ways in 2006. The businessman married Shilpa in 2009 and the couple has a son and a daughter.

Here's why 'Boycott Kareena Kapoor Khan' is trending on social media

Kareena Kapoor Khan is everyone's favourite and has been the queen of hearts for more than two decades. Hence, it comes as a surprise to us when we came across a hashtag like #BoycottKareenaKapoorKhan, which was trending on Twitter.

Recently it was reported that Kareena Kapoor Khan was approached to play the role of Sita in Atul Kohli's Desha's Sita. The incarnation, penned by K Vijayendra Prasad - who has written the Bahubali franchise. The actress reportedly demanded a whopping Rs 12 crores to play the role of Sita and that irked the netizens immensely. As soon as this news broke out, some people took to their accounts and shared their thoughts on it. The consensus was that she has hurt the Hindu sentiments by putting 'demands' to play the role of Sita. Some allegedly said that Kareena is not fit to play the role of Sita and rather should give the role to Yami Gautam or Kangana Ranaut.

The rage took another twist when some people said that if she is playing Sita, ask her to change the name of her son. Some even named it draged Saif Ali Khan's name in this and said that he had hurt religious sentiments with Tandav.

Looks like the diva's demand for a fat fee took an ugly turn on social media. Let's wait and watch now what Kareena Kapoor Khan has to say about this.

Chris Woakes, David Willey return to England T20I squad for Sri Lanka series

Chris Woakes, David Willey, and Liam Dawson made their return to England as head coach Chris Silverwood on Saturday named a 16-player squad for the T20I series against Sri Lanka.

Sri Lanka and England are slated to lock horns in three T20Is and three ODIs, beginning June 23. Woakes returns to the squad for the first time since 2015. His last international cap in this format came in November 2015 against Pakistan. On the other hand, Willey last played at this level in May 2019 and will be looking to add to his 28 caps. Dawson, who last played a T20I for England in February 2018 in New Zealand, is one of three specialist spinners named.

Durham all-rounder Ben Stokes (fractured finger), Sussex seamer Jofa Archer (right elbow) and Surrey's Reece Topley (side strain) were not considered for selection due to ongoing injuries.

"With the T20 World Cup only a few months away, we continue to work on perfecting our team and continue to progress on the field. We want to approach every series with an influx of players aiming to win every match and giving us the best preparation as we get closer to the tournament," said Silverwood in an official statement.

"With several high-profile players missing through injury, it allows me to look at some of our experienced players, who have not featured at this level for some time. The likes of Chris Woakes and David Willey are very experienced cricketers, and to have them both in the mix is exciting and shows the depth of squad we have available," he added.

The England Men's T20I squad will report to its Cardiff base on June 19.

Euro 2020: Finland snatch win over Denmark after Christian Eriksen collapse

Finland beat Denmark 1-0 in their opening match of Euro 2020 which was overshadowed by Christian Eriksen collapsing and having to be revived on the field by medics. Joel Pajala scored the only goal on the hour mark of a Group B match which was stopped for nearly two hours after Danish playmaker Eriksen slumped to the turf towards the end of the first half. There were fears for his life as he was given CPR by medics on the pitch as his teammates, some distraught, formed a circle around him. The stadium had fallen into a shocked silence as the medics worked but Eriksen was eventually carried off the field at the Parken Stadium in Copenhagen and a photo showed him apparently holding his head as he laid on the stretcher.

The Danish Football Union (DBU) said the Inter Milan player was awake and had been able to speak to teammates. "We've been in contact with him, and the players have spoken to Christian." DBU director Peter Møller told Denmark's Radio (DR). "That's the great news. He's doing fine, and they are playing the game for him." The match, which had kicked off at 18:00 local time (16:00 GMT), resumed two-and-a-half hours later in front of a passionate crowd at the Parken Stadium. Chants of "Christian" and "Eriksen" from both sets of supporters rang around the stadium as news of his status began to filter through to supporters.

Inter-city cricket championship to start from July 5

LAHORE: Ninety-three teams involving 1800 cricketers will be participating in the Inter-city Cricket Championship at their respective association level, to be held across the country from July 5 to Aug 6.

"Ninety-three sides will be in action across the country in the city cricket association tournament 2020-22 from July 5 to Aug 6, which will provide a pathway to around 1,800 cricketers to graduate to the cricket association tournaments that include first-class, non-first-class three-day, 50-over and 20-over competitions," a PCB press release stated on Saturday.

"According to the event format, each match will be of two days with 100 overs to be bowled each day in seven hours and 20 minutes of play with a two-hour break from 12:00-1:40. To encourage red-ball-oriented cricket, an innings will be limited to 75 overs per side and no bowler shall bowl more than 15 overs in an innings."

"Each city association, depending on the number of cities in that association, will be split into groups with each cricket association to ultimately have a champion."

"Baloachistan comprises 13 city associations, Central Punjab 16, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa 19, Northern 11, Sindh 17 and Southern Punjab 13."

The monsoon season also falling in July-August may create problems in completing the matches with a result as most of the matches will be decided on the first-innings lead.

Meanwhile, the PCB has restored the six teams of the Lahore City. In its new constitution implemented on Aug 19, 2019, the six-team quota of Lahore has been reduced to only three. But now each of the three zones - East, West and North - of Lahore City are fielding two teams each.

At the end of the two-day matches, a triangular round at all six associations will also be held among the toppers and runners-up of each city. That round will also be of two-day matches.

Canada: Man faces terrorism charges in attack on Muslim family

A man accused of running down a Muslim family in a Canadian city of London, Ontario, this month, killing four people including a teenage girl, now faces terrorism charges, authorities announced on Monday.

The London Police Service said in a statement that Nathaniel Veltman's four counts of first-degree murder "constitute terrorism offences" and that federal and provincial prosecutors had agreed to begin terrorism proceedings.

Thousands march in support of Muslim family killed in Canada's first, mourning at funeral for Muslim family killed in Canada's first terrorist attack in London and the politicians who premeditated it.

Veltman is accused of deliberately hitting five members of the Afzaal family with a pick-up truck while they were out for an evening walk on June 6.

Salmun Afzal, 46, his 44-year-old wife Madiha Salmun, their 15-year-old daughter Yumna and her 74-year-old grandmother, Talat

Afzaal, were killed in the attack, while the couple's nine-year-old son was seriously injured.

Veltman also faces one count of attempted murder, which authorities said on Monday also constitutes "terrorism activity".

The 29-year-old, who made a brief appearance in court on Monday via video, has yet to enter a plea.

The attack has shaken Muslim communities across Canada, which for years have called for action to address Islamophobia and bigotry, especially following a deadly mass shooting at a mosque in Quebec City in January 2017.

Saboor Khan, a friend of the family, told the Associated Press news agency that upgrading the charges against Veltman was "the right thing to do".

"The family and the community has been terrorised and many of us are afraid to leave our homes," Khan said.

The National Council of Canadian Muslims (NCCM), a national advocacy group, said on Monday that the terrorism charges were "an important development", but would commit more later.

Canadian Deputy Prime Minister Chrystia Freeland also reacted to the new charges, saying: "It is really important for us to name it as an act of terrorism... and it is important for us to identify the terrible threat that white supremacism poses to Canada and to Canadians."

A funeral for the Afzaal family drew hundreds of mourners to the Islamic Centre of Southwest Ontario over the weekend.

Raza Bashir Tarar, high commissioner for Pakistan to Canada, said during Saturday's service that the entire nation of Pakistan - where the family was originally from - "stands shoulder-to-shoulder with you in this hour of grief, in this time when our hearts are bleeding because of the atrocity that has befallen this wonderful, marvelous family".

Thousands of supporters also marched from the location where the family was killed to a mosque 7km (4.4 miles) away.

Still, many members of Canada's Muslim community remain frightened. Selma Tobah, a 31-year-old graduate student who lives in London, told Al Jazeera last week that many community members feel as though "it could have been one of us".

Calls for concrete action to root out Islamophobia are growing as well.

Canada has found itself increasingly squeezed between the two superpowers, which are also its largest trading partners. Two Canadians - Michael Kovrig and Michael Spavor - remain jailed in China over national security charges after Canadian border guards arrested Meng Wanzhou, Huawei Technologies Co.'s chief financial officer in 2018, under a U.S. extradition request.

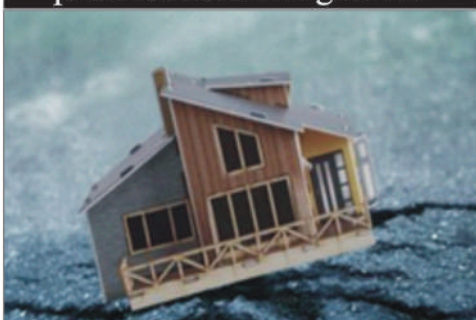

"At this meeting, Canada led the way on a challenge approach to addressing the challenges posed by China," he told reporters at a news conference in Ottawa.

A former senior official from a G-7 country remembers Trudeau at previous summits, including the one in Sicily, when the clean-shaven Canadian was literally mobbed by photographers wherever he went.

Back in 2017, in Taormina, the official noted that Trudeau was well liked and that one shouldn't forget that surviving an election cycle in the current political era is no small feat.

Whether Trudeau could aspire to occupy Merkel's throne at the G-7, the official was clear: no way.

Could Canada's high-flying housing prices come crashing down?

This article was created by MoneyWise. Postmedia and MoneyWise may earn an affiliate commission through links on this page.

Royal Bank of Canada's regulatory filings for the second quarter of 2021 contain more of what you'd expect, including several best-case/worst-case scenarios that help the banking giant illustrate how much risk the company is exposed to.

It can make for pretty bland reading, but there's usually a hint of spice when it comes to projecting the worst possible outcome for real estate. And RBC hasn't disappointed in that area - by saying home prices in Canada could fall by as much as 30 per cent, under certain conditions.

But what are the chances of that happening? Put another way, it's a question on the minds of most housing market watchers: Can real estate prices in Canada fall as fast as they've been rising?

RBC's worst that could happen housing price projections partly on macroeconomic indicators like employment, consumer spending and economic growth. So for RBC's worst case to play out, Canada would have to return to the economic turbulence seen in the first few months of the pandemic, with a colossal rise in unemployment, a prolonged recession and plummeting

In the housing market nuclear winter that RBC laid out, a home in Canada priced at $713,500 in March 2021 would be valued at $502,304 by June of next year.

A sudden drop to that extent - 29.6 per cent - would be catastrophic for any recent homebuyers who were able to cobble together only a minimum down payment of 5 per cent. Even new owners who put 20 per cent down would find themselves short on equity, and if they felt pressure to sell after a price collapse, they'd have to do it at a loss.

But RBC's worst that could happen situation involves the wheels coming off the economy in April 2021. We're already into June, and things are looking up. At least one COVID-19 vaccination has been shot into the arms of more than 23 million Canadians, and lockdown procedures are finally being lifted - though very slowly - in Ontario, the country's largest economy. Even RBC analysts are upbeat.

RBC Global Asset Management chief economist Eric Lascelles recently predicted that Canada will "enjoy a profound economic recovery." Lascelles had little negative to say about the housing market.

Looking at the market's potential for 2021, including the continued impact of low mortgage rates,

Lascelles said Canada can look forward to "a housing market that's likely to be a little bit less hot, but probably not one that's going to be correcting or anything quite like that."

More likely scenarios

To be fair, RBC isn't the only institution that painted a gloomy and unlikely worst-case scenario for housing. One from Bank of Montreal saw real estate prices falling by 28.7 per cent between March 2021 and Dec. 2022. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation's nightmare scenario involved home prices dropping 50 per cent, and unemployment reaching a peak of 25 per cent.

RBC's filing documents also include base-case and best-case scenarios. In the former, the average home price could hit $871,417 by April 2026. In the latter, it could reach more than $1.2 million.

It burts to say this, first-time homebuyers, but those outcomes are far more likely than RBC's doomsday outlook. The base case would require annual average price growth of about 4.4 per cent over the next five years. That's pretty much a given. The best-case scenario relies on average growth of approximately 14.4 per cent per year.

That's hardly out of the question. The national average selling price in April was 41.9 per cent higher than a year earlier, according to the Canadian

Real Estate Association.

Reasons to bet against a Canadian housing crash

Even with home values heading into uncharted territory at a time of global economic misery, there are several reasons the housing market is unlikely to falter:

- o Immigration. The Canadian government will be welcoming 400,000 newcomers to the country in 2021, 2022 and 2023. That's 1.2 million people who will be putting pressure on the housing market, either as buyers or renters. Sellers will have no shortage of new families to sell to, and investors who saw their rental income crushed by the pandemic will once again be able to raise rents.

- o Low mortgage rates. As the economy continues recovering, mortgage rates will inevitably start rising. But with many lenders still offering variable rates below 2 per cent, Canadians will find entering the housing market inviting - from a mortgage perspective, at least - for quite some time.

- o Unquenched demand. Even with the new stress test rules in place, there are still more buyers than there are properties for sale. Each time a home sells after receiving bids from 15 optimistic house hunters, that means 14 bidders will still be in need of a house once the dust settles.

- o Rigorous underwriting. Lenders put Canadian homebuyers' finances under an electron microscope before being approved for their mortgages. Their credit scores are evaluated, their incomes are verified and their debt-to-income ratios are carefully measured. In Canada, legitimate lenders do not give mortgages to people who can't afford them.

ut those factors together and it becomes very difficult to imagine a situation where homeowners will ever be forced to sell their homes at a significant loss, en masse and simultaneously - the hallmarks of a housing crash.

If some unforeseen economic calamity were to take place, one that slaugthers the incomes of both homeowners and renters, you might see sellers desperately racing to get out of their mortgages. Until then, though, the real worst-case scenario Canadian homebuyers have to worry about is actually RBC's best - one where most properties in the country are worth over $1 million.

With Merkel leaving, Trudeau positions himself as new 'Dean' of G-7

With Angela Merkel preparing to exit the international stage, the longest-serving leader of the Group of Seven is Canada's Justin Trudeau. While he is positioning himself as the new elder statesman, no one sees him owning the role in the way the German chancellor did.

Joe Biden has decades of experience on the international stage, even if he's new to the U.S. presidency. France's Emmanuel Macron has aggressively positioned himself as Merkel's heir in Europe (he will step down after an election in September) and Italy's Mario Draghi, with his years of experience running the European Central Bank, is used to being heard wherever he goes.

In the company of such heavyweights, the leader of the smallest G-7 economy cuts a marginal figure in spite of efforts to be the new "Dean," as he became known among the Canadian delegation at this weekend's summit in Carbis Bay on the southern English coast.

Indeed, as leaders walked down the long beach boardwalk on Friday to help the U.K. and the European Union find a solution to their trade dispute over Northern Ireland. No one has taken him up on the offer, it seems, even as Brexit tensions boil over on the last day of summery.

Those visuals tell only part of the story. As Brexit flared up on the sidelines of the gathering, Trudeau offered his services as mediator.

Canadian officials say the 49-year-old prime minister, in power since 2015, genuinely believes he can help the U.K. and the European Union find a solution to their trade dispute over Northern Ireland. No one has taken him up on the offer, it seems, even as Brexit tensions boil over on the last day of summery.

The host, Boris Johnson, did however rap him to lead a high-stakes discussion on China and how to counter its growing economic and strategic might. A Canadian official said it was in recognition of his experience. Trudeau certainly has experienced the wrath of Beijing.
