Trudeau moves on pledge to cap oil and gas emissions as COP26 talks begin in Scotland

GLASGOW, UNITED KINGDOM — Prime Minister Justin Trudeau invoked the memory of Lytton, B.C., on Monday as he called for global action in the fight against climate change and formally committed to a cap on emissions produced by Canada's oil and gas sector.

The prime minister was speaking at the 26th meeting of the Council of Parties to the UN climate convention, known as COP26, where more than 120 world leaders have gathered for two days to assess global efforts to address what many see as an existential problem.

It was in that context that Trudeau referenced the record-setting temperatures that set the stage for the devastating wildfire that swept through the village of Lytton in June, destroying much of the community.

"What happened in Lytton can and has and will happen anywhere," Trudeau told the assembled leaders, including U.S. President Joe Biden and German Chancellor Angela Merkel. "How many more signs do we need? This is our time to step up — and step up together."

Trudeau went on to formally launch his government's latest effort to reduce Canada's greenhouse gas emissions by committing to a cap on emissions from the country's oil and gas sector.

Such a cap had been promised in the Liberal's recent election platform, with plans to force emissions down until they hit net zero in 2050. A lack of regulations for the sector has long been a sore spot between environmental groups and Ottawa.

"We'll cap oil and gas sector emissions today and ensure they decrease tomorrow at a pace and scale needed to reach net zero by 2050," Trudeau told the leaders.

"That's no small task for a major oil and gas producing country. It's a big step that's absolutely necessary."

The announcement was met with mixed reaction. Dale Marshall, national climate program manager with Environmental Defence, said Trudeau's pledge felt short.

"Focusing on emissions from oil and gas production but not production itself will allow oil and gas companies to keep putting forward false solutions, such as carbon capture and storage, fossil-based hydrogen, and far-off net-zero plans, all while pumping out more and more atmosphere-destroying fossil fuels," Marshall said in a statement, adding Canada has the weakest emissions-reduction targets of G7 nations.

"We cannot go from climate laggard to even the middle of the pack without curtailing oil and gas production, starting now."

Newly named Environment Minister Steven Guilbeault along with Natural Resources Minister Jonathan Wilkinson sent a letter to the government's net-zero advisory body Monday asking for its help to develop policy to support the new plan.

"We seek your advice on key guiding principles to inform the development of quantitative five-year targets," the letter reads.

"Your advice will also help inform the emissions reduction plan for Canada's 2030 target that we are committed to tabling in Parliament in the coming months."

Trudeau arrived at COP from the G20 leaders' summit in Rome, where leaders agreed that global warming had to be limited to 1.5 C by the end of this century. However, they failed to agree on specific actions to make that happen.

While Trudeau promised to cap oil and gas sector emissions, Canada will not increase its targets for cutting greenhouse gas emissions further than what was announced earlier this year.

In July, Canada formally submitted to the UN its new target, which aims to have 40 to 45 per cent fewer emissions than in 2005 by 2030. The previous target was a 30 per cent reduction in emissions from 2005 by 2030.

The prime minister said Sunday that while there is always a lot of attention on the setting of targets, not enough attention goes to meeting them. He said Canada is now focused on implementing the policies needed to meet its existing targets.

Coronavirus: What's happening in Canada and around the world on Monday

The U.S. government will require companies with at least 100 workers to provide paid time off for employees to get vaccinated against COVID-19 and paid sick leave to recover from effects of the shots, a Biden administration official said Monday.

Those requirements will be part of a pending federal rule that will spell out how large employers will meet a requirement that workers be vaccinated or tested regularly for the virus.

The White House budget office has completed its review of the rule being written by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, which is expected to be released this week.

The rule — issued under emergency standards to respond to the pandemic and set to be published in the Federal Register "in the coming days" — will cover firms with 100 or more employees, regardless of how many are located in any particular spot.

"Covered employers must develop, implement, and enforce a mandatory COVID-19 vaccination policy, unless they adopt a policy requiring employees to choose either to get vaccinated or to undergo regular COVID-19 testing and wear a face covering at work," a U.S. Labour Department spokesperson said Monday. The rule "also requires employers to provide paid time to workers to get vaccinated and paid sick leave to recover from any side effects."

A Southwest Airlines flight takes off from the Portland Jetport, in Portland, Me. The head of Southwest has said his airline will not fire anybody for refusing to get the vaccine.

Separately, the administration will give federal contractors broad authority on how to treat employees who refuse to be vaccinated, according to guidelines that the White House issued Monday.

Under an executive order that U.S. President Joe Biden issued in September, contractors have until Dec. 8 to ensure that employees are fully vaccinated. The order has met resistance from some workers at large employers with federal contracts, including American Airlines and Southwest Airlines. The CEO of Southwest said his airline would not fire anybody for refusing to get the shots.

246.8 million COVID-19 cases had been reported worldwide, according to Johns Hopkins University's online coronavirus database. The reported global death toll stood at more than five million.

In the Asia-Pacific region, Cambodia on Monday began vaccinating five-year-old children against the coronavirus as its leader announced the start of the country's reopening, including the phased re-entry of foreign tourists.

Vaccinations for two million children age six to 11 began Sept. 17 and are nearly complete.

In the Middle East, Israel on Monday began welcoming individual tourists for the first time since the onset of the pandemic. It had planned to reopen to tourists last spring but delayed the move amid a spike in cases driven by the delta variant.

Israel has since rolled out a booster campaign in which nearly half the population has received a third vaccine dose.

In Europe, Russian President Vladimir Putin said on Monday that the country may need the army's help to build field hospitals for COVID-19 patients as it battles a surge in infections. "The situation in the country is very difficult," Putin said in remarks to Defence Minister Sergei Shoigu and other top brass. "More than 40,000 cases [a day]. This has never happened."

Meanwhile, the Ukrainian capital of Kyiv implemented tough new restrictions on Monday in an attempt to stem a surge in COVID-19 infections that is affecting many countries across eastern Europe amid a slow take-up of vaccinations.

From Monday, residents of Kyiv will have to present vaccine certificates or evidence of a negative COVID-19 test to use restaurants, cafes, gyms, entertainment facilities and shopping malls. Staff working in those places must have been vaccinated. City authorities have said special teams will monitor compliance with the restrictions on public transport.

A Moroccan protester lifts a placard in Arabic that reads "my body my freedom" during a demonstration against the government's COVID-19 vaccine pass in Rabat on Oct. 31.

In Africa, protests erupted across cities in Morocco on Sunday against a coronavirus vaccine passport that is required to access indoor activities and travel. Proof of vaccination has been mandatory since Oct. 21 for all Moroccans to enter their place of work and restaurants and for domestic and international air travel.

In the Americas, Mexico's Health Ministry said it had received nearly six million AstraZeneca vaccine doses against COVID-19 as pressure grows on the government to widen its vaccination rollout to include children.

Who you can sponsor for Canadian immigration

Here is an overview of how you can sponsor relatives such as your brother, sister, or other family members to immigrate to Canada. Canada welcomes over 100,000 family class immigrants per year.

It is well known that most of these immigrants arrive through the Spouses, Partners, and Children category while a smaller number arrive under the Parents and Grandparents Program (PGP).

The rules surrounding sponsoring other family members are less well known. However, it is important to remember that Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) does allow you to sponsor other family members in very specific situations.

Those 18 and older who are Canadian citizens, permanent residents, and persons registered under Canada's Indian Act are eligible to sponsor their family to obtain Canadian permanent residence.

Most sponsor their spouse, partner, or parents or grandparents. There are two other options for who you can sponsor.

Orphaned brother, sister, nephew,

niece or grandchild

IRCC states you can sponsor an orphaned brother, sister, nephew, niece, or grandchild if all of these conditions are met:

- "they are your relative either by blood or through adoption"
- "both of their parents passed away"
- "they are below the age of 18"
- "they are not married or in a common-law or conjugal relationship"
- On the other hand, IRCC says you can not sponsor this family member if any of the following applies:
  - "they have a parent that is still alive"
  - "the location of their parents is unknown"
  - "they were abandoned by their parents"

"they are being cared for by someone else while one or both of their parents are still alive"

"their parent is in jail or otherwise detained"

Orphaned

As another option, you can sponsor one relative that is related by blood or adoption of any age as long as all these conditions are met:

- "the sponsor (i.e., Canadian citizen, permanent resident, or person registered under Canada's Indian Act) does not have a living relative that you could sponsor instead such as a spouse, common-law partner, conjugal partner, child, parent, grandparent, or an orphaned brother/sister/nephew/niece/grandchild"
- "the sponsor does not have any relatives that is a Canadian citizen, permanent resident, or is registered under the Indian Act. If the relative you are sponsoring has a spouse, partner or dependent children that also want to come to Canada, you will need to include them on the same sponsorship application.

How to apply

There are two steps to the sponsorship application process. You apply to sponsor your relative, and they apply for permanent residence. You must submit both applications to IRCC at the same time.

IRCC provides the following guidelines on how to prepare and submit your application:

"confirm you and your relatives meet the eligibility criteria"

"read the application guides carefully"

"provide all requested documents and evidence in your application. You will need to submit evidence such as proof of income and sign legal declarations such as committing to financially support your relative upon their arrival to Canada."

"be truthful when answering all questions"

"pay applicable fees"

"ensure your relatives and their close family (if applicable) complete required health and security checks"

Among the ideas mixed was his most important climate policy forcing utility companies to go green.

Eager to have a policy to show at the UN climate summit in Glasgow, and to make progress on some priorities before a batch of state-level elections next week, Biden revealed his remaining priorities for the budget bill, the vehicle tax credit included.

The Buy American vehicle idea was initially championed by Michigan Democrats in both chambers of Congress.

There's still no guarantee this will become law. Progressive Democrats are deeply disappointed in the reduced scope of the bill and it's unclear if it will receive the votes required in the House of Representatives and Senate.

Representatives of the Canadian auto industry have hinted that they envision lawsuits if the measure goes forward.

The Canadian government did not make that explicit threat in Ng's public letter, but it did describe the idea as contrary to international trade rules.

Kirsten Hillman, Canada's ambassador to the U.S., said on Thursday evening that it's "too soon" to speculate about how Ottawa would respond if the bill becomes law.

Canada's new housing minister faces complex, cross-jurisdictional challenges

Ahmed Husseini is less than a week into his new role as the architect of the federal government's housing strategy, but he's already drawn up a blueprint.

"I think the first and foremost thing is to build housing supply," Husseini said in his first interview as the new federal housing minister in an interview airing this weekend on CBC's The House.

"It is to ban foreign ownership in our housing sector. It is to implement the promised tax on non-residential, non-Canadian vacant homes beginning in January 2022 and (make) sure that we, as a federal government, get together our other partners to ensure that they can leverage our sponsoring investments to build more housing supply, but also to increase the capacity of non-profit organizations and municipalities to build more housing supply and more affordable housing."

Housing is a provincial responsibility. Even so, Husseini said he is confident that he can work out agreements with the provinces, based on his experience in the last government as the minister for families, children and social development.

"You know, we struck eight agreements with provinces and territories on child care, which is a shared jurisdiction," he said. "It's a clear provincial jurisdiction, but we brought our vision of $10-a-day child care to provinces and territories and we worked with them to get to eight agreements."

Husseini won't have his own standalone department. It will be contained within the federal infrastructure department - a decision intended to leverage housing into federal-provincial agreements on transit.

For example, the Trudeau government negotiated a $12 billion agreement with the Ontario government last May for new transit lines in Hamilton and Toronto. But the money came with conditions, including a commitment to build affordable housing along the routes.

Those lines, and the housing, are

"We're going to put $4 billion on the table and the municipalities and communities that are willing to be innovative, that are willing to be ambitious as we are, will get access to that money," Husseini said.

"And the ones that, you know, that don't want to move forward in terms of removing those barriers will simply not have those incentives. So, it's a question of really partnering with those that are willing to move faster and in a more ambitious manner to build more housing supply."

Ontario to reveal plan for COVID-19 booster shots next week: Elliott

The Ontario government is set to announce next week when everyone in the province will have access to their third dose of the COVID-19 vaccine.

Health Minister Christine Elliott said Friday in a tweet the plan will "provide information to all Ontarians" about when they can expect to receive their third shot.

Elliott made the announcement after the National Advisory Committee on Immunization expanded eligibility guidelines for booster shots of COVID-19 vaccines in Canada.

In August, the Ontario government began offering third doses to select vulnerable communities. Last month, they expanded that criteria.

An interval of at least two months or eight weeks between the second and third dose is recommended for those eligible.

The Ministry says that the minimum interval should be 28 days, but says that "an interval longer than the minimum 28 days between doses is likely to result in a better immune response."

The Ontario government says two doses are still considered a full course of immunization.

In Ontario, 22,476,654 vaccine doses have been administered to date. Nearly 88.1 per cent of Ontarians 12 and above have one dose and 84.3 per cent have two doses.

Canada urged Biden to drop a 'Buy American' idea. Seems he's sticking to it

What's new

A long-awaited announcement from U.S. President Joe Biden is going to make some Canadians unhappy.

Biden released updated highlights of his key budget plan Thursday and it includes language Ottawa has been worrying about: a Buy American-type provision for the auto industry.

It involves a tax credit for U.S.-made cars that the Canadian government describes as potentially damaging, and also illegal under international trade law.

It came in an announcement from the White House of its list of priorities after months of negotiations among Democrats resulted in a smaller version of its original multi-trillion-dollar budget package.

One idea that made the cut was a maximum $12,500 U.S. tax credit for people who buy electric vehicles, with some conditions: "[T]he tax credit will lower the cost of an electric vehicle that is made in America with American materials and union labour," said the White House.

Then, later in the day, congressional Democrats released the full text of their 1,684-page budget bill; it confirmed new details of a tax credit favouring U.S. vehicles.

The plan would grow in two phases.

At first, a part of the $12,500 credit - $4,500 of it - would be reserved for vehicles assembled in the U.S. Then, starting in 2027, only U.S.-assembled vehicles would qualify for any of the $12,500 credit.

What's the context

Ottawa has been fretting about this idea for months. It's worried about the effect on a Canada-U.S. auto industry that has long been integrated, with parts repeatedly moving back and forth across the border.

Those concerns were publicly voiced in a letter last week to nearly a dozen U.S. officials by Canada's Trade Minister Mary Ng.

Its stated concerns are threefold: Potential future job losses in Canada, alleged violations of international trade agreements and disruptions to cross-border supply chains that could also hurt Americans who supply parts to Canadian plants.

The move comes as the auto sector is making long-term decisions about where to build future electric fleets and the fear in Ottawa is that the tax credit creates an unfair incentive to invest in the U.S.

Biden unveiled the nearly $2 trillion suite of programs Thursday before leaving for G20 and climate summits in Europe.

This budget package forms the heart of his domestic legislative agenda - touching on climate change, child care, health care and corporate taxes.

However it's a much more modest package after some democratic senators insisted on trimming numerous ideas from Biden's plan.

Alia Bhatt's latest picture has a Ranbir Kapoor reference

Alia Bhatt and Ranbir Kapoor have been dating for a while now and rumors of their impending wedding have been doing the rounds for months. While the actors weren't really open about their relationship initially, Alia has been sharing images and posts which allude to the actor. In fact, the couple even spent Ranbir's birthday together. Now, Alia has shared a post on Instagram which has been raking in the likes.

The post also has a Ranbir Kapoor reference. Alia is dressed in denim shorts and a green crop top which shows off her waistband abs. Alia holds a leaf in front of her face but a piece of jewelry on her finger has caught people's eye. She is seen wearing a ring with the number 8 on it - Ranbir's lucky number. Some may even say that it is the "infinity symbol" if placed horizontally.

Kajol Devgn Gets Heavily Trolled For Her Black Bodycon Dress; Fans Call It A Fashion Disaster

Kajol was recently seen getting dressed up for Filmfare and getting trolled for her black and white dress. While she looked absolutely gorgeous and pulled off her outfit, the netizens didn't seem to like her outfit much as she got trolled on social media.

It is not surprising that Kajol is a stunning performer, whether she is playing a role for the big screen or posing in a fashionable outfit. With her usual charm, she can pull off any ensemble, no matter how simple. Whether she is dressed in her traditional six yards or a western outfit, Kajol can carry both with equal fervor.

Kajol Devgn was recently spotted getting dressed up for Filmfare and unfortunately her dress sense made people troll her. In a video that has gone viral, the actress was seen walking down the red carpet of an awards ceremony dressed in an eye-catching body-con gown that was designed for drama with its plunging neckline, thigh-high slit, and dramatic collar. Netizens did not seem to like Kajol's choice of clothing despite it being a fitted silhouette. Many netizens trolled her outfit and even compared her to the big boss out contestant Urfi Javed.

Despite all this criticism, the actress carried her outfit with great confidence and looked elegant. Meanwhile, on the work front, after making her digital debut with Tribhanga, Kajol is in the works on a film directed by Ravathy Asha Kelani called The Last Hurrah.

Rajkumar Rao And Patralekhaa All Set To Tie The Knot In November

It's raining weddings in Bollywood. After Ranbir Kapoor-Alia Bhatt and Vicky Kaushal-Katrina Kaif, it looks like another couple is also reportedly all set to get hitched this year. And we are talking about the power couple Rajkumar Rao and Patralekhaa. According to reports published in ETimes, Rajkumar Rao and Patralekhaa are planning to tie the knot after Diwali next month in the second week of November.

According to the report, Rajkumar Rao and Patralekhaa's wedding will take place between November 10 to November 12 this year. It is also reported that the couple has already informed their close friends from the industry. The couple's wedding will also be attended by their close industry friends. They will be having a close knit ceremony. The couple is yet to make an official announcement on the same.

Rajkumar Rao and Patralekhaa have been dating each other for more than eight years now. They have been with each other through thick and thin. Earlier speaking to Humans of Bombay, Patralekhaa spilled beans on her relationship with the actor and said, "I can tell you this, when you find the one - through the fights, hurdles & chaos, you should never forget to let them know you love them. It doesn't have to be with expensive gifts & dates, it can simply be with the way you hold them while they need it & when they don't. For us, we don't know what the future holds, but this, being together, is enough."

T20 World Cup: Daryl Mitchell and Kane Williamson lead New Zealand to 8-wicket win over India

Daryl Mitchell (49 of 35 balls) and Kane Williamson (33 not out of 31 balls) led New Zealand to an emphatic eight-wicket win over India in an important Group 2 match of the ICC Men's T20 World Cup at the Dubai International Stadium here on Sunday.

After restricting India to paltry 110/7 in 20 overs, New Zealand chased down the target easily with 33 balls to spare.

Martin Guppitt began by hitting Varun Chakravarty for back-to-back boundaries in the third over. Guppitt took a boundary off Jasprit Bumrah in the next over. But on the next ball, Guppitt miscued a loft to mid-on, Shardul Thakur grabbed it on the second attempt. Daryl Mitchell continued the good show, dismissing Mohammed Shami for a six over long-on followed by back-to-back fours.

Post Powerplay, Mitchell continued the good show, dismissing Mohammed Shami for a six over long-on followed by back-to-back fours. Mitchell fell a run short of his maiden T20I half-century in the 13th over, holding out to long-on off Bumrah. Williamson banged around to hit two fours off Hardik Pandya in the 14th over before a six over long-on followed by back-to-back fours. Mitchell added a partnership of 72 off 54 balls with Williamson to keep New Zealand steady in the chase.

Mitchell fell a run short of his maiden T20I half-century in the 13th over, holding out to long-on off Bumrah. Williamson banged around to hit two fours off Hardik Pandya in the 14th over before scoring the winning single to complete their first win of the ongoing tournament.

Brief score: India 110/7 in 20 overs (Ravindra Jadeja 26 not out, Hardik Pandya 23, Trent Boult 3/20, Ish Sodhi 2/17) lost to New Zealand 111/2 in 14.3 overs (Daryl Mitchell 49, Kane Williamson 33 not out, Jasprit Bumrah 2/19) by eight wickets.

Three captains fair enough

Captaincy plays a key role in shaping a team's performance be it in the long or shorter versions of cricket. However, with an increasing number of games across all the three formats - Tests, ODIs and T20s - it becomes quite challenging for a captain to shoulder all responsibility and cope with the pressure of expectations.

Former India skipper Gundappa Viswanath has suggested different captains for the three formats, provided India have potential team leaders.

Viswanath, 72, who represented the country in 91 Tests, felt split captaincy will help reduce the workload on one captain.

"Yes, if you have three different captains of calibre - you can't just force it. You can't just make somebody lead the side, he has to be good. He can bring down the load for one person," Viswanath told Sunday midday after inaugurating the Madhav Mantri Cricket One-Day League at MCA's Bandra-Kurla Complex Ground on Saturday.

Viswanath, who was India's chairman of selectors for the 1996

World Cup, added: "One-day cricket, even though it's 20 overs or 50 overs, takes a lot (of a captain). These days, within no time you see that you have already played 200 matches. So, the workload is too much and if we have that, (three captains for different formats) it's fair enough."

Virat Kohli leads India in all three formats. However, he has decided to step down as T20I skipper after the ongoing T20 World Cup.

Currently, Joe Root is England's Test captain while Eoin Morgan captains the ODI and T20 sides. Tim Paine and Aaron Finch lead Australia's challenge in red and white-ball cricket respectively. However, Kane Williamson leads New Zealand in all three formats.

Gundappa Viswanath, 72, remembers a lesson learnt during his first meeting with former Test cricketers Madhav Mantri and Polly Umrigar when he was playing the Ranji Trophy semi-final for Mysore against Bombay at the Brabourne Stadium in 1969-70.

"Madhav Mantri said, 'Don't throw your wicket away; let the bowler take it'. That really helped," remarked Viswanath, who scored 29 and 95 in the match Bombay won on the basis of first innings lead. Viswanath also revealed how he mastered his trademark late cut. "When I started playing, I didn't have much muscle. I was very thin. My drives and flicks never went to the boundary rope. Hence, I worked on the square cut and late cut, basically to get more fours," added Viswanath.

"This is the lowest level of the human form, attacking someone over religion is the most pathetic thing a human being can do. 'Never thought of discriminating on basis of religion. That is a very sacred thing. Our brotherhood and friendship can't be shaken... and these things can't influence. I give credit to people who understand,'" he added.

Hundreds of messages were left on Shami's Instagram account saying he was a "traitor" and should be thrown out of the Indian team. However, support poured in from his many fans and celebrities from all walks of life to back the bowler.

Novavax files for COVID-19 vaccine approval in Canada

Samples from patients participating in the Novavax Phase 3 Covid-19 clinical vaccine trial await testing at the University of Washington Medicine Retrovirology Lab at Harborview Medical Center in Seattle on Feb. 12.

Novavax announced Monday in a news release that it had completed a rolling submission to Health Canada for authorization of its two-dose COVID-19 vaccine, a long-awaited development for the Maryland company, which has struggled to bring its doses for use in the global inoculation campaign.

Shares of Novavax rose about 11 per cent before the opening bell after the company also said it had filed an application for emergency use for the vaccine to Canada as well as the European Medicines Agency.

"Novavax continues to deliver regulatory filings that we expect will bring the first protein-based COVID-19 vaccine based on Phase 3 data to the world," Stanley C. Erck, Novavax's president and chief executive officer, said in a statement.

Meanwhile, Novavax got its first approval anywhere in the world on Monday, when the company and partner Serum received emergency-use authorization for their COVID-19 vaccine in Indonesia.

For Indonesia, the vaccine will be manufactured by the world's largest vaccine manufacturer, Serum Institute, and sold under the Indian company's brand name, Covovax.

Novavax said initial shipments into Indonesia are expected to begin imminently. The country is slated to receive 20 million doses of the protein-based vaccine this year, according to the government.

According to tracking from Johns Hopkins University, just over 27 per cent of Indonesians have been fully vaccinated against COVID-19.

Novavax has so far applied for emergency-use authorization in various countries, including the United Kingdom, Australia, India and the Philippines.

The company, along with Japanese partner Takeda Pharmaceutical Co., said on Friday it was preparing to seek regulatory approval for a rollout in Japan early next year.

Novavax and Serum Institute have committed to together provide more than 1.1 billion doses to the COVAX facility, co-led by the World Health Organization. The supply of the vaccine will start this year after securing an emergency use listing from the WHO and continue into 2022.

Novavax has delayed filing for U.S. approval to the end of this year, and Politico has reported that the company has faced production and quality problems. The Trump administration placed a big bet on the Maryland company early in the pandemic, Politico reported.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, left, is shown getting a tour during a visit to the National Research Council of Canada (NRC) Royalmount Human Health Therapeutics Research Centre facility in Montreal on Aug. 31, 2020. It has been expected that the site would produce millions of Novavax doses.

Erck told Yahoo! News last week that the company will be filing for approval to the U.S. Food and Drug Administration this quarter.

It's not clear how Novavax's shot would be utilized in Canada, where 84 per cent of those ages 12 and over have been fully vaccinated against COVID-19. As it did with several other companies, the federal government struck a deal with Novavax early in the pandemic, with Canada agreeing early this year to purchase 52 million doses.

It was announced that Novavax would produce its own COVID-19 vaccine at the National Research Council (NRC) site in Montreal, and in mid-October the NRC said in a statement that "the work with

Air passenger misses flight after glitch causes some smartphones to set time back 1 hour a week early

If you woke up to see your phone's time is an hour earlier than it should be, you're not alone.

Many Manitobans and people across the country experienced a technical issue with their Bell smartphones Monday morning. Kunal Akilbela was scheduled to get on a flight to Toronto at 5:45 a.m., but missed his flight.

His phone showed a different time than his daughter's phone, so they decided to just go back to sleep, going off the time on his phone.

"I noticed the clock was one hour behind, so it really confused me," he said at Winnipeg James Richardson International Airport on Monday.

Kunal Akilbela missed his flight to Toronto because of the Bell Mobility smartphone technical glitch. Luckily, he can get on a later flight at no charge.

When they woke up and got to the airport at what was actually 5:15 a.m., not 4:15, the gate had already closed.

"Of course it was frustrating. I thought everything was automatic and we should not have difference [between smartphones]," Akilbela said.

Luckily the father and daughter are able to board a later flight at no cost to them.
